830 Attend 8th PASA Conference

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — A record 830 people attended the 8th annual Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture conference on farming for the future in mid-February at the Penn Stater Hotel and Conference Center in State College.

The audience represented a diverse mix of those involved in agriculture, according to PASA officials.

"By far this was the best yet," said Tim Bowser, PASA executive director. "The quality of the farmer presentations, the number of people attending, and the energy that people brought with them. There was an amazing spirit of, 'Let's build a food system that works for farmers and consumers,' throughout the weekend."

Bowser said that keynote speaker, William McDonough, "... really ignited the crowd's sense of the possibilities. We were fortunate to have him at our conference."

McDonough stressed the impact today's activities will have on tomorrow's children as the essential consideration to give in making a decision about the nature of developing food systems, rather than relying on motivations based on a desire to garner as much personal wealth during the present.

According to Lauren Shorsher, PASA official, also well received was closing keynote speaker Ann Clark, a professor, parent, and grazing consultant, who discussed her ideas about the future of family farming.

Shorsher said Clark echoed McDonough's call for considering children and children of the future first.

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) — A hearing was held January in Harrisburg by the state Center for Rural Pennsylvania to gather testimony as to the effects and causes of low commodity prices to farmers.

The Center for Rural Pennsylvania is an agency of the state General Assembly and is headed by a

Swine Moratorium Proposal Not Considered By NPPC

ANDY ANDREWS

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — A modified proposal submitted by Brent Hershey, president of the LanChester Pork Producers Council that requested the National Pork Producers Council (NPPC) to ask its members to voluntarily delay construction of new sow farms for a period of one year, was not considered at the recent National Pork Forum held in Nashville, Tenn.

According to David Reinecker, Pennsylvania Pork Producers Council (PPPC) president, the resolution was not considered legal by NPPC. Essentially, no commodities organization, except for a registered cooperative, may conspire to control supply of a product, as defined by anti-trust legislation, particularly the Sherman Anti-Trust Law of 1890 and the Capper-Volstead Antitrust Law of 1922, according to Steve Meyer, NPPC's director of economics.

"The (U.S.) Justice Department watches trade associations closely," said Meyer. The proposal, in the form intended for the delegates at the national meeting last week, was a blatant violation of the anti-trust legislation, said Meyer.

Essentially, pork producer organizations "can do things like education," including studies on the results of overproduction, Meyer said. But they step over the line when they ask producers to act to control supply.

Hershey, president of Hershey Ag, Marietta, was the originator of the proposal. Hershey brought the first version of the proposal up for consideration by the PPPC at the council's board meeting in mid-February. The proposal passed by a very narrow margin, 10-9.

Despite the close vote and dissension among those who believe in keeping government out of producers' affairs, a modified resolu-

DAILY NATIONAL GRAIN SUMMARY

Grain and soybean bids continued to move higher again today. Wheat 5 to 10 cents higher. Corn 1 to 4 cents higher. Sorghum 4 cents higher. Soybeans 4 to 5 cents higher. Wheat bids were supported by USDA's CCC tender for another 771,400 tonnes of donation wheat. Also, talks that the US ban on US corn and wheat sales to Iran may be lifted, boosted bids. Some fund buying on the Board and three days of stronger bids helped grain and soybean bids higher.

Oklahoma City Feeder Cattle

Oklahoma City, OK
Wed Mar 10, 1999

USDA-OK Dept Ag Market News
Oklahoma National Stockyards - Weekly Cattle Summary

Compared to last week: Feeder and stocker cattle steady; exception again noted on steers over 900 lbs and heifers over 800 lbs, 1.00-2.00 lower, as they drop back in line with market; storm in the north also limiting outlets for big cattle. Demand good for all classes. General rains of 1/2 to 1 inch fell across the state Sunday night. Good chances for rain again this weekend. Weigh-ups gaunt to average, few full. Quality below last week with full range of plain through attractive, bulk average to attractive. Feeder cattle in medium to moderate wheat flesh with more toward medium than last week. Light cattle mostly stockers and these in thin to medium flesh. Only limited numbers of stockers available with bulk supply feeder cattle off wheat. Slaughter cows firm to 2.00 higher. Slaughter bulls steady to 1.00 higher. Packer demand good as winter storm in the north has curtailed movement of cows to plants. Demand moderate to good for cows returning to the country. Total of 320 cows and bulls sold with 45 percent to packers. Receipts this week 13,200; last week 16,577; last year 9,912. Supply consisted of 80 percent yearlings over 600 lbs; 18 percent calves and short yearlings under 600 lbs; 2 percent cows and bulls. Prices follow with weighted average weight and price in parenthesis.

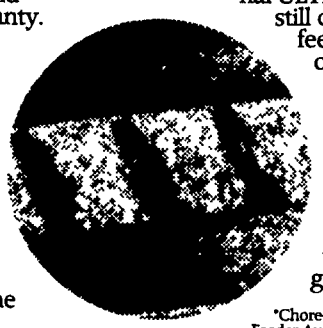
How Do You Improve On The Best?

In the case of Chore-Time's ULTRAFLO® Cage Feeder, you do it by beefing up the auger wire and extending the product warranty.

Chore-Time's new and improved ULTRAFLO® Cage Feeder uses our exclusive round-wire auger. It is nearly 10% heavier than our original ULTRAFLO®. And that means strength and years more running time for you! We're so confident of it that we've warranted the auger for twice* as long as the old model.



What's more, you still get all the features you valued in the original ULTRAFLO® Feeder. You can still count on unparalleled feed savings, economical operation, and ULTRA-FLO's remixing action which eliminates feed separation.

Chore-Time's ULTRAFLO® Cage Feeder—contact us today for more information on how the best just got better!

*Chore-Time's New ULTRAFLO® Cage Feeder Auger has a 10-year prorated warranty

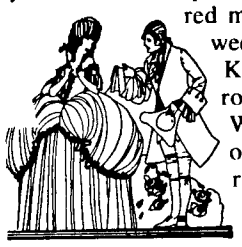
The OLD FARMER'S THIS WEEK WITH ALMANAC

MARCH 15-21, 1999

VERNAL EQUINOX, MARCH 20.

LOVE IN SPRINGTIME

In honor of spring, we offer some folklore tips on how to attract and keep the attentions of your beloved Gather herbs on Midsummer Eve and make a potion of them Eat tomatoes, potatoes, and hot spices (both of you). Eat from Aphrodite's sea: oysters, octopus, and red mullet. Put marigolds into your wedding bouquet for a lasting love. Keep in mind, though, that romance can be hazardous. New World settlers banned public acts of affection When a sea captain returned to Boston after three years at sea, he kissed his wife in public and was sent to the stocks for "lewd and unseemly behavior"



The heart that loves is always young.

TIP OF THE WEEK

LOVE'S LEMON CAKE

1/2 cup shortening
1 cup sugar
2 eggs
1-1/2 cups flour
1 teaspoon baking powder
pinch of salt
1/2 cup milk
grated rind and juice from 1 large lemon
1/2 cup confectioners' sugar

Cream together shortening and sugar, then beat in eggs Sift together dry ingredients and stir into sugar mixture Beat in the milk and lemon rind Bake at 350° F in a buttered and floured 9x5-inch loaf pan for 45 minutes. Combine lemon juice and confectioners' sugar to make a glaze and drizzle over the warm cake

Makes 8 to 10 servings.

The OLD FARMER'S WEATHER PROVERBS

March grass never did good.

A snowy February, a dusty March, a moist April, and a dry May presage a good year.

Snow in March is bad for fruit and grapevine.

OPINION

Before It's Too Late

The dairy industry may now need to take more seriously the need for biosecurity in their dairy herds. According to David Tomsche, DVM from Minnesota, who spoke recently at the Mid-Atlantic Dairy Conference, current practices of the dairy cow farming industry are inadequate to deal with the present threat of infectious disease. As dairymen, we have assumed the cows were big enough to ward off any disease that may be transmitted by visitors to our barns. But with the new diseases cropping up, this is not true anymore. Among the traditional domesticated livestock species, the general biosecurity measures and practices used by those who raise dairy cows falls far behind what peers do who raise other livestock species.

Through experience with infectious diseases, concerns about consumer confidence, and demands of other nations regarding agricultural trade, the poultry industry has developed strict research-based, industry-wide disease control protocol. The same is true for many swine facilities, where permission to enter farm lanes is reserved only for those with a need and prior clearance to enter the lane

Some dairymen and industry people do practice some biosecurity measures, such as washing footwear before leaving a farm, taking pains not to contaminate the boots or other equipment before it is loaded onto a vehicle for a trip to the next farm on the circuit

However, if it should be discovered or even widely perceived that an infectious disease of dairy cattle can infect humans, it can be expected that many dairy farms will face either adopting similarly strict biosecurity measures or face going out of business

It makes sense to begin an industry-wide emphasis on biosecurity for dairy farms now before public opinion forces us into it The dairy industry in other countries has been forced into strict regimens of health control to guarantee a safe dairy product for the consumer. These regimens begin on the farm, not in the processing plant

We believe the U S dairy industry will be forced into the same biosecurity position in the near future. Let's make traffic into our dairy barns meet the same requirements as anyone or anything that comes into a poultry or swine operation And let's do it before it's too late

To Prepare for Y2K

Most people feel the Y2K issue might be an inconvenience but not a disaster. At a recent conference it was reported that the Pennsylvania Utilities Commission is not anticipating large scale power outages or loss of telephone communications State wide, the banking industry is nearing 100 per cent compliance

Experts are predicating that 5 per cent of the 5 billion computer chips in the world may fail That means many individual machines or pieces of equipment may fail These same experts stated that 90 per cent of the problems which do develop will be corrected within three days

Experts are recommending to prepare for Y2K like any other type of emergency, like a snow storm Have on hand a five to seven day supply of food, water, flashlights, battery operated radio, etc You should make a list of all equipment that uses a computer or has computer chips and determine if they are Y2K compliant, Y2K noncompliant or do not know Then you need to develop plans on dealing with the noncompliant and do not know groups

Work with your dealers now so you may prevent a disaster on January 1, 2000 Any event you should develop back up plans in case the electricity does go off for several days Make sure your generators work and you have adequate fuel supply

To Shop for Electricity

In the era of deregulated electricity, consumers should be very savvy shoppers, according to Dr Dennis Buffington, Penn State Agricultural Engineer Each customer's local utility is still responsible for transmitting and distributing electricity to homes and businesses

Power generation companies are currently marketing services across Pennsylvania Customers need to know whether prices listed by suppliers are just for generation or if transmission of power is included You need to be sure the price you pay per kilowatt hour is listed. Are there special peak and off peak rates?

Customers should determine if the supplier includes a monthly charge, a minimum monthly charge or a membership fee Remember, you cannot receive the rate quoted or lowest price if you do not sign up and monitor your bill

To Make Tractors Safer

Each year an average of 132 American farm workers are crushed to death as tractors overturn during operation Nearly all fatalities resulting from a farm tractor roll over could be prevented

The key to prevention is the presence of Roll Over Protection Structure (ROPS) on every tractor. Sweden recorded a 92 per cent reduction in tractor roll over fatalities between 1961 and 1983 due to legislation that required all tractors to have ROPS installed Similar reductions were found in Nebraska study Since 1967, the Nebraska study found that 40 per cent of the persons involved in tractor roll over accidents with a tractor not equipped with ROPS died.

Only two per cent of those having accidents with tractors equipped with ROPS died The two per cent death rate was the result of one accident in which the operator was not using the safety restraint or seat belt and was thrown from the tractor with a ROPS system installed ROPS may be either enclosed or open However, a seat belt must be used in conjunction with ROPS to keep the operator inside the protective structure during a tractor roll over

It is estimated that there are 1 61 million tractors in the United States Of these, over half are not equipped with ROPS or seat belts The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health estimates that over the next 31 years there will be 2,800 deaths as a result of roll over deaths from tractors without ROPS Make sure you or a family member is not one of these statistics by making sure all your tractors have ROPS

❖ FARM FORUM ❖

Editor:

Last Friday, March 5, the bottom fell out of the milk price when the Basic Formula Price (BFP) decreased from $16.27 to $10.27 per hundredweight (cwt.). At the end of this month the advance price dairy farmers will receive for February milk will fall the entire $6.00 per cwt., while average blend prices will fall to these new levels in April.

Last week all but one of the farm organizations and all of the state's dairy cooperatives testified in Harrisburg in favor of Pennsylvania's joining the Northeast Dairy Compact. The only farm group opposed to the Compact was the Independent Dairy Producers. A representative of the 200-member organization said the Compact would mean an end to the Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Board (PMMB) and the relatively high premiums enjoyed by his members. Dennis Schad of Land O'Lakes testified that the Compact would supplement local milk regulation and would not replace the PMMB. Beverly Minor, chairwoman of the PMMB, supported Schad's statement.

THE BIBLE SPEAKS

BY LAWRENCE W. ALTHOUSE

POINTING THE RIGHT WAY
March 14, 1999

Background Scripture:
John 1:19-42
Devotional Reading:
Ephesians 4:25 through 5:2

One of the finest Christian voices of the 20th century came from a land most of us cannot locate on a world map. The more familiar name of this teardrop-shaped island at the tip of India is Ceylon, but today it is known as Sri Lanka.

This Sri Lankan was known to the Christian world as D.T. Niles, a gifted speaker and evangelist who was selected to give the opening address at the historic Amsterdam meeting of the World Council of Churches. In 1951, his only book in English to that time was published, That They May Have Life, (Harper). It is a small book of only 120 pages, but it is the best book on the why and how of Christian witness I have ever read.

At one point he says: "Evangelism is witness. It is one beggar telling another beggar where to find food. The Christian does not offer out of his bounty. He has no bounty. He is simply guest at his Master's table and, as evangelist, he calls others too." Forget all the things you think you know about evangelism and begin with the idea that we are all "beggars." There are people in the church that seem naturally endowed to be preachers, teachers, and evangelists. But we don't have to be any of those to be involved in evangelism, for we are, like all human beings, beggars trying to find food.

BEING A CHRISTIAN

So, as a beggar who has found food at the Lord's Table, it is incumbent upon me to help other beggars find that food. I don't have to point to myself and say, "Look at what I am and what I know." What I need to do is simply tell other hungry souls where to find the same food to which someone else directed me. That is no less true for you. You, too, can at least point other beggars in the right direction. As Niles puts it, "Evangelism is not a program, it is being a Christian."

The religious authorities were very concerned about John's credentials. Levites and priests were sent to him to ask, "Who are you?" John did not hesitate to confess "I am not the Christ" (1:19), "And they asked him, 'What then? Are you Elijah?' He said, 'I am not.' 'Are you the prophet?' And he answered, 'No.' They said to him then, 'Who are you?'" John was not willing to play their name games and said simply, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, 'Make straight the way of the Lord'."

Both friends and foes alike wanted to focus on John personally, but instead he determinedly pointed away from himself to the Christ: ". . . among you stands one whom you do not know . . the thong of whose sandal I am not worthy to untie." Again and again they tried to focus on John, but each time he pointed to Jesus and said, "Behold, the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world" (1:30). As a Christian that is our task, too — to point to Jesus and say, "Behold the Lamb of God!" (Not in those words, of course, because they are not meaningful to most of the fellow beggars we encounter.)

AN INVITATION

Niles says that "Evangelism is the proclamation of an event, it is also an invitation to an encounter — an encounter with the risen Christ." Many of us are "not merely prodigal from their Father's home but have actually forgotten the Father's address . . . It is our task to make the Father's address known, to be signposts directing travelers to the Father's presence . . ."

That's what John the Baptist did, he pointed people to an encounter with the Christ. When two disciples of John came to Jesus asking, "Rabbi . . . where are you staying?", he invited them to a personal encounter: "Come and see" (1:39). Then one of them, Andrew, found his brother Simon Peter, and made the same invitation to him. If they could point people in the right direction, so can we.

Pa. Dairy Stakeholders Sets Standards

MIDDLETOWN (Dauphin Co.) — In the changing world of dairy farming, it is increasingly important for dairymen to assess how well their business operation is performing.

Now, Pennsylvania dairy farmers have available standards or "benchmarks" to help measure their dairy farm production and business success.

These benchmarks can be found on the Internet at http://www.psu.edu/dept/aers/bench/index.htm.

Developed as a project of the Pennsylvania Dairy Stakeholders, the Internet site provides clearly identifiable production, profitability, and business benchmarks, or standards, for three different herd sizes.

Descriptions of the benchmarks enable a producer to develop comparable estimates for their own operation by utilizing their existing farm financial and production records.

"Individual dairy producers face many challenges as they deal with changing dairy structure, new technology, and the need to increase production and profitability," according to Penn State's Agricultural Economist Dr. Milton Hallberg.

"Comparing an individual farm's information to a standard set of benchmarks can be very meaningful as a starting point in assessing current practices and planning future changes."

Selection of the 19 different production, profitability and business benchmark categories is based on both their usefulness as a measure and their availability on most dairy farms.

Production examples include percentage of heats detected, herd somatic cell count, and dry matter intake per pound of milk.

Examples in the profitability area are milk sold per worker, net farm income per cow, and family living expense. Financial measures include assets per cow, return on equity and debt-asset ratio.

The benchmarks available on this Internet site were developed from the PA Farm Bureau and the PA DHIA record-keeping systems and are representative of a set of Pennsylvania dairy farms in 1997.

The information will be updated as new information becomes available. Dairy producers who do not have access to the Internet can contact their county extension agent for access to the benchmarks and related materials.

The benchmarks were developed by the Pennsylvania Dairy Stakeholders in conjunction with the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology at Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences.

Persons involved in the task force that developed the information included: Dr. Milton Hallberg, task force co-chairman and Penn State professor of agricultural economics; Boyd Wolff, task force co-chairman and former Pennsylvania secretary of agriculture; Joel Rotz, PA Farm Bureau; Jonas Kauffman, Keystone Farm Credit; George Wilcox, Erie County Extension; David Slusser, PA DHIA; Dr. Larry Hutchinson, Penn State Extension veterinarian; and, Dr. Bob Parsons, and Dr. George Greaser from the Department of Agricultural Economics at Penn State.

Organizations and individuals are encouraged to link the dairy benchmark Internet site to other appropriate dairy and farm management information sites. Printed copies of the information can be made directly from the website.

Questions or comments can be addressed to the Department of Agricultural Economics at Penn State by calling 814-865-5461, or the Pennsylvania Dairy Stakeholders at 717-948-6328.

USDA FSA Offers Honey Loan

POTTSVILLE (Schuylkill Co.) — The U.S. Department of Agriculture has been authorized to implement a 9-month loan program for honey produced in 1998.

Producers who have extracted honey during 1998 may place the honey under loan if it is stored in eligible containers.

The loans will only be available during a 60-day period after the regulations are published in the Federal Register.

The honey loan program will utilize a loan rate of 56 cents per pound, and the loans will mature nine months after the month a specific loan has been approved.

Honey must remain in storage during the loan period, and the USDA Farm Service Agency will conduct spot checks during the storage period to assure compliance.

The program is national, and those interested should contact their local USDA Farm Service Agency. Federal agencies are listed in the blue pages of telephone directories.

For those in Schuylkill County, the USDA FSA office is located on the Gordon Nagle Trail. Call (570) 622-1555 for additional details on eligible containers, current interest rates, and loan service fees.

State FFA Members Participate In Legislative Conference

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

HERSHEY (Dauphin Co.) — Two-hundred twenty-five FFA members representing 38 schools participated in the 12th annual FFA State Legislative Leadership Conference this week, touring agribusinesses and visiting with state legislators.

The conference, conducted from Sunday through Tuesday, included a tour of the Milton Hershey School and the Hershey Foods Corp. chocolate factory Monday and continued with a legislative breakfast near the state capitol Tuesday.

According to Daryl R. Schafer, executive secretary of the Pennsylvania FFA Association, simulated legislative workshops which examined six bills put before the legislature were conducted during workshops at the host hotel for the conference, the Grantville Holiday Inn. "The bills ranged from conservation easements to vaccination of cats," said Schafer.

The committees, comprised of 35 FFA members each and organized by the FFA were scheduled to meet and vote on the bills Monday evening. There, second-year scholars led the committee discussions, according to Schafer. He said the second-year scholars used their experience of past conferences to help lead the discussion. Of 24 applications, the association accepted six to represent all four state regions.

On Monday, the FFA'ers toured the Milton Hershey School, comprised of 10,000 acres, with different learning centers, according to Marcia Paterson, director of agricultural and environmental education at the school. The school is home to 1,050 students kindergarten through 12th grade. The tour included the new horticultural complex.

On Monday morning the tour included one of the Hershey Foods chocolate factories.

Each school was allowed up to five FFA members, including any officers, to participate.

At the luncheon at Milton Hershey School Monday, Ray Brace, senior vice president of operations for Hershey Foods Corp., spoke to the conference participants. He related his work as senior vice president of a company who oversees and coordinates "the supply chain," he said, to farming.

In his position, Brace said that he is in charge of "procurement of materials and support functions toward product quality, regulatory compliance, information technology, and project and design engineering."

Also a farmer, Brace spoke about how a farm is managed in the same manner, a minibusiness that "buys seeds, plants it, adds value, and sells and distributes crops."

Brace is partner with Harold Hamilton on a 80-acre beef finishing cattle operation in Derry and Conewago townships. The partnership has been in operation about 20 years.

Brace spoke about growing up in inner-city Pittsburgh and how he began farming later in life. But he recognized the value of the family farm and agriculture in general and decided to raise his family on a farm. Brace told the FFA members that he admired the general characteristics of a farmer, someone who incorporates "common sense, strong work ethic, and knowledge" in producing good, quality products.

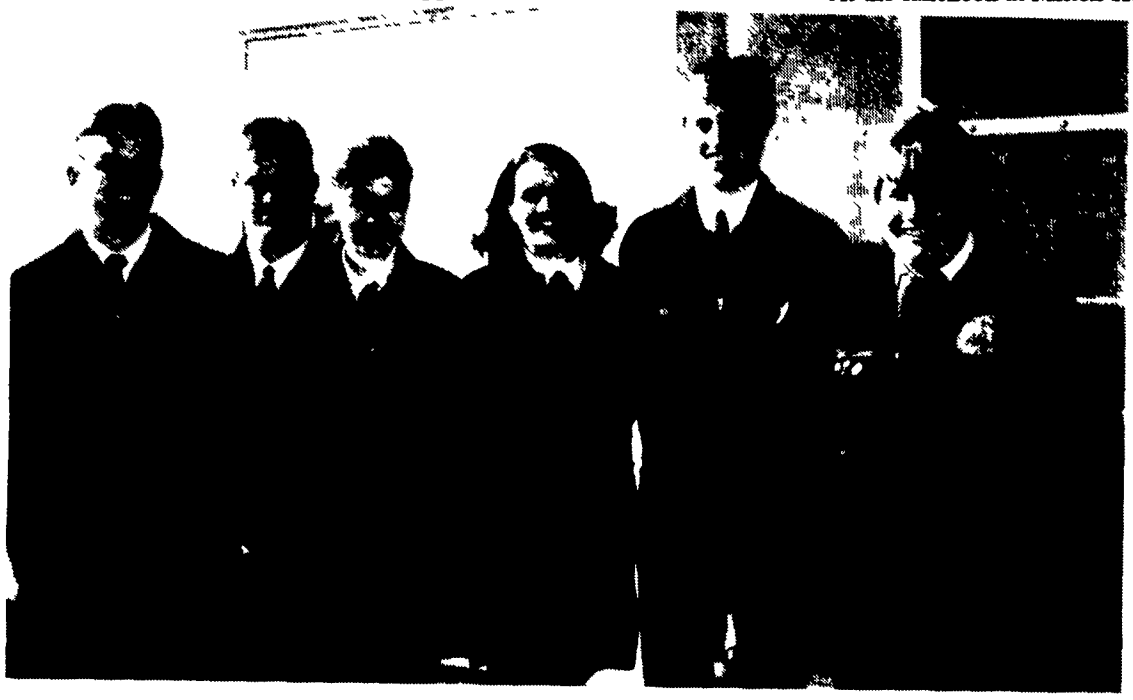
Brace emphasized the importance of "interpersonal skills" and told the FFA members to be "understanding and compassionate, open and honest and value diversity," he said. Most importantly, good communication skills are essential, to not only speak well, but, more importantly, to listen.

"Many hear," said Brace, "but few listen well."

Questions from the FFA member ranged from how Hershey Foods Corp. is able to keep its trade secrets on candy formulas to how they react to changes in a competitive market. He said one FFA member asked him if the Nutrageous trademark candy bar was a reaction to the Snickers trademark bar. He told her that candy available on the market at the time included the "nut roll" types with a fudge center. Simply, Hershey decided to capitalize on the success of the Reeses trademark and substitute peanut butter for the fudge center.

Brace said he worked "up through the ranks in the manufacturing organization" to become vice president of operations. He said he was once manager of the Hershey chocolate plant.

On Tuesday morning, a legislative breakfast at the Harrisburg Hilton was scheduled. There, the FFA members met with state legislators and learned about the state legislative process.



The committees, comprised of 35 FFA members each and organized by the FFA, were scheduled to meet and vote on the bills Monday evening. There, second-year scholars led the committee discussions, according to Schafer. He said the second-year scholars used their experience of past conferences to help lead the discussion. The scholars, from left, are Derrick Adair, West Perry FFA; Jeff Hobbs, Meyersdale FFA; Jenn Merroth, Twin Valley FFA; Michelle Fetterolf, West Snyder FFA; Jason Mowry, Northern Bedford FFA; and Dayna Weinhold, Hans Herr FFA.

Commodity Pricing Hearing

board of directors, chaired by state Rep. Sheila Miller, a long-time advocate of agriculture in the state.

With the support of the board, Rep. Miller called for a hearing to receive comments on commodity pricing and the effects upon the state's rural community.

The hearing was held in early January, during Farm Show, at the state Farm Show Complex in Harrisburg.

Despite poor road conditions, it was attended by a number of representatives of agricultural organizations with offices in Harrisburg, as well as representatives of the livestock production and processing industry in the southern region of the state, and the state General Assembly's respective agricultural leaders and their representatives.

In addition to Rep. Miller, also representing the Center for Rural Pennsylvania was its secretary, Joe Dudick, who also serves on the Center's board as the representative for Gov. Tom Ridge; and Barry Dank, executive director of the Center.

The hearing was held because of severe declines in livestock and grain producer prices, while consumer prices have not correspondingly fallen.

However, the plight of producers of market hogs dominated testimony.

According to information presented, in Pennsylvania, from November 1997 to November 1998, there was a 22-percent average decline in producer prices.

While all livestock producers received lower prices, independent hog producers received the greatest reduction, with a 50-percent or more decline in price.

During the same time, the price of corn, oats and potatoes, declined by 25 percent.

Rep. Miller said that the effects were not only felt by Pennsylvania producers, but producers nationwide.

She said that from July 1996 to July 1998, producer prices declined 25 percent, while consumer prices increased 8 percent.

In 1980, producers received 37 cents of the retail dollar, while it declined to 23 cents in 1997.

"I'm sure any other industry would not have survived" the decrease in producer prices, she said.

In 1997, producers lost $350 million, or an average of $6,400 per farm, according to Rep. Miller.

Furthermore, she stated that between 1990 and 1997, the state lost 3,000 farms, or an average of one farm per day. In terms of productive farmland, Miller said that during the same time, 400,000 acres of farmland were converted out of agricultural production, which she said equated to a rate of 135 acres per day.

Rep. Miller said that, in light of the severity of the problem facing domestic agricultural producers, the hearing was held in an attempt to gather information that could help identify the causes for the drop in commodity prices; to better quantify the impact of the problem; and to generate suggestions for what state government can do to help.

"It is also important to tell consumers what is happening within the farm community," she said.

David Reinecker, president of the Pennsylvania Pork Producer's Council who raises Yorkshires in Bermudian Springs, and Oscar Manbeck, director of the PPPC, testified first.

Reinecker's son Andrew, a high school student involved with the family farm operation, sat next to his father at the witness table.

Reinecker said the spate of low prices is something, "... the likes of which haven't been experienced since the Great Depression. We are victims of our own success.

"We are simply producing more than the market will bear. It must correct itself through a reduction in national inventory," he said.

As far as what the state could possibly do to help protect the instate industry, he suggested that it create a premium pricing program, which in his description sounded similar to what Pennsylvania has established (and courts have upheld against many challenges) for the dairy production industry through the authorities granted the Pennsylvania Milk Marketing Board.

According to Reinecker, the background of Pennsylvania hog production is that instate producers have had an economic disadvantage in raising hogs when compared to producers in Midwestern states, mainly because corn prices in Pennsylvania are higher than in the Midwestern states.

Reinecker also said that packers in the Midwestern states compete for hogs, and while Pennsylvania hog producers had previously enjoyed about a $2.50 per hundredweight price advantage compared to Midwestern competitors, the margin has been nonexistent for years.

He said the Depression-level producer prices receiving currently by producers are great for two leading instate processor-buyers, Hatfield Quality Meats Inc. and Leidy's. He also noted that those buyers had recently established minimum prices for producers.

"Currently their markets are some of the strongest in the nation," he said.

In addition to suggesting that state government should create a pricing law whereby instate packers are required to pay instate producers more for their hogs, Reinecker said the government should also consider a labor subsidy for hog packers, in the form of tax relief.

To help pay for the tax break, or as a substitute program to add value to instate produced market hogs, it was also suggested that some form of tariff on fuel, or a Pennsylvania Turnpike toll incentive, could help to finance support for instate producers and create a disincentive for packers to purchase out-of-region produced hogs.

He said that, in his opinion, the current producer-price crisis is "... serious for all producers, large and small. But I recognize the industry is responsible for the the prices."

Rep. Miller questioned Reinecker about some of the specific changes and advances made within the pork industry that may be partially responsible for the overproduction for market.

She asked about the number of sows (females producing young) as compared to the number of farms.

It was noted that while there are many times fewer individual hogs operations in the state and nation, they are larger and overall hog production has increased.

While the number of sows producing feeder pigs may have declined, it does not reflect a decrease in feeder hog production. Rather, there has been a dramatic increase in production per sow, in terms of the average number of piglettes in each litter, as well as the number of litters per year.

Production has ballooned because of the advantages of better nutrition, genetics, and husbandry techniques, he said.

At the same time, the animals being produced are not as diverse in carcass composition as in the past, which makes for more consistency, requiring less overhead costs for packers.

Reinecker said the low hog producer prices have created a financial nightmare for farmers who have watched their investments depreciate toward bankruptcy, and has caused bankers to tighten up on loans.

"When prices plummet, banks pull back to guard their assets. Banks are getting very jittery (about their loans) without having assets on the farm to cover them," Reinecker said.

He expressed hope that lenders would be patient with clients who produce hogs, because it is Reinecker's belief that the current price decline is part of a cyclical price movement and that it will rebound.

However, it was noted that when producers are receiving $40 to $50 per animal that normally would bring $250, it is difficult to absorb that kind of loss.

It was reported that, as of early January, some pork producers had already pushed their credit line to the point where they had only enough credit to cover the cost of a week's worth of feed.

"December has been ugly, ugly, ugly for the pork industry," he said.

In response to questions from Dudick and Miller, the representatives of the state's pork producers said that while the 1996 Farm Bill was designed to wean all United States agricultural production away from government support prices, in preparation for eliminating hurdles to creating fair international free trade pacts, the pork production industry, especially in Pennsylvania, has never relied much on government support.

It was said that while this is still the assumed preference of pork producers, several outside causes prompted the plunge in prices — specifically, the failures of the economies of nations to which much of the surplus pork was intended to be exported.

Instead, all that pork that was to be headed for China, etc., was foisted upon the domestic market.

It was also explained by a member of the audience that the major reason wholesale and retail prices have not dropped in response to producer prices is because of a bottleneck in the slaughtering industry.

It was explained that in response to increased federal government rules and regulations of slaughter house and butcher houses (which were created in reaction to incidents involving illnesses and deaths that resulted from the consumption of undercooked, contaminated meats), as well as increased efficiencies, the nation is limited in the number of hogs that can be slaughtered daily.

According to a member of the audience, there are only 380,000 shackles (which hold the killed market hogs) nationally, implying that regardless of the number of hogs waiting to be killed and processed, the nation's plants have been running at full capacity, and the cost of slaughtering and marketing hasn't changed, just the cost of the raw product.

It was estimated that, as a result of the failed exports being dumped on the domestic market, six months worth of additional supply was in the producer-to-market pipeline.

It was also reported that the current glut of market hogs on the domestic market may well result in the failure of a fourth of the nation's producers before the surplus can be absorbed.

"We're not talking months," Reinecker said. "We're talking days and weeks. We need help immediately."

Dudick said that in very short time, China has become a world leader in apple production, pressuring not only Pennsylvania apple growers, but even Washington state apple growers, whose production usually affects Pennsylvania producer prices.

He asked if it were possible for China to adopt United States hog production technology to become a world leader in low-cost pork production.

According to representatives of the PPPC, while it is best to never say "never," the climate of the United States is ideally suited for hog production, whereas there is no comparably sized favorable climate region in China.

While that doesn't necessarily preclude China from becoming a world-leader in hog production, it makes it less likely.

It was explained that hogs have a preferential temperature range of 60 to 70 degrees, and while they can tolerate temporary swings in temperature above and below optimum, they don't do well if the temperature is consistently higher or lower.

Lancaster Holstein Club Sees 136 Excellent Cows In Three Herds

EVERETT NEWSWANGER
Managing Editor

Bradford Co. and southern New York – You could call it "a barn meeting on a bus" as more than 60 Lancaster County Holstein breeders, including some of their families, traveled by coach and an extra van on the annual county Holstein tour Not only did they visit three of the highest scoring type herds in the nation, the comradery and cow talk on the three hour ride to and from these farms could easily have happened when good friends and neighbors get together down on the farm in somebody's barn

The sense of cohesiveness in the group came from common knowledge and interest As one tour participant acknowledged, the smells of the cow stables brought onto the bus from visits to the barns added to "the just-like-home" atmosphere

In addition, good-natured ribbing, combined with serious discussion on milk and land prices, pedigree components and personal experiences with various aspects of daily farm life, made the trip worthwhile Even the hilarious running commentary on the merits of type classification for guinea pigs made everyone along for the ride feel a part of the this special one day Holstein community

Of course, all the visited dairy farms were exceptional The beautiful udders found at Mt Glen Farm, Columbia Crossroads, made a wonderful first stop Dean Jackson gave a hearty welcome both to the farm and on behalf of the Bradford County Holstein Association Dean and his wife Becca and parents Ben and Regina Jackson farm 560 acres in Bradford County's rolling farm land A special attraction was the dam, full sister and two half sisters of Mt Glen Broker Lucy (2EX-94) the new All-American Sr 3-Year-Old that was bred at Mt Glen Lucy is now owned by Carousel Farm in Illinois Her dam in the Jackson herd is again bred to Broker

The tour group then continued further north

When have you seen 53 excellent and 100 very good classified cows in one herd of 180 head? That's what the Lancaster Holstein people saw at Lantland Farms at Horseheads, N Y This mostly homebred herd not only has grand old mother cows in the herd, but the next generations look good too—many of them from homebred sires Well known in showing circles in New York State and across the nation, the 1993 All-American heifer now stands in the row of tie stalls as an excellent cow so tall you can hardly see over her

As one Lancaster dairyman said, "These are real cows The stalls are at eye level with no special effort to make the cows look better than they are "

The feeding program is a simple haylage, dry hay, and corn silage combined with high moisture corn and soy fed with a computerized automatic feed cart This cart moves on a track in front of the cows and stops to dispense feed to each cow as needed

"We love good cows," Ross Lant said "Good old cows "

On the last classification, the Lants had a BAA of 109 8 One cow is classified 2EX-95, and six are EX-94 Lantland Farms is owned by the Lant family including Ruth Lant and her family Walter, Ross, Marjorie, Martin and their families including granddaughter Anita Lant Also, Curi Menzi

From Lantland the tour started toward home with one more important stop—the highest BAA score (110%) in the nation for herds with more than 125 cows

Gor-Wood-D Farm in Mansfield is known for top show ring winnings But when you visit the farm, you see these great cows look just as good in their work clothes Ron Wood hosted the tour and said they enjoyed going to the shows but want cows that look good and also produce milk

"I don't mind going to the

Ag Day Salutes The Farm Community

National Ag Day Brings Agriculture Closer to Home

MINNEAPOLIS- Few consumers today can claim a tie to a farming operation, but they may be closer to agriculture than they think.

That's the assertion of the Ag Council of America (ACA), a group that coordinates National Ag Day, which will be held next Saturday, March 20.

"You don't have to farm to be involved in agriculture," said Eldon White, president of ACA. "The chain of goods and services connected with agriculture stretches far and wide. You may work at a bank, a manufacturing company or an advertising agency in even the most urban areas and still be connected with agriculture."

National Ag Day has been held annually since 1973. It was created to call attention to the wide-ranging influence of agriculture and demonstrate its value to our society, said White.

U.S. Rep. Larry Combest (R-Texas), chairman of the agriculture committee in the House of Representatives, said agriculture does not get much attention in our society because the reliability of our food and fiber system is rarely in question.

"Being dependable, agriculture is taken for granted by a large segment of our population," he pointed out.

To create awareness for agriculture in 1999, the ACA will conduct a campaign it calls "America's Largest Classroom on Agriculture."

This campaign explains the role of agriculture to school children, and the vision of this campaign is to "reach classrooms with exciting materials that help students learn about the vital role agriculture plays," said Joyce Spicher, ACA chairperson.

In addition, numerous activities will be held in Washington, DC, to stress the importance of "agricultural literacy" in United States schools.

A briefing will be held for key congressional and federal media secretaries prior to National Ag Day, special classroom activities will be held in schools in the Washington, DC, inner-city school district, and a luncheon will be held March 17 with US Agriculture Secretary Dan Glickman (invited) to discuss the importance of National Ag Day.

"Too often, the only time agriculture makes the news is when there's a food scare of some sort," says Spicher. "It may be contamination, lost crops or rising prices. But the reality is that our nation has the safest, most economical food supply in the world."

Yet, despite the reliability and safety of our food supply, the industry continues to look for ways to deliver an even better product to consumers, Spicher said.

For example, farmers and ranchers are producing meat lower in fat and cholesterol. Beef today has 27 percent less fat by the time it reaches the grocery store than it did in 1985. Today's fruits stay fresh longer because of advancements in research. And resources are being used more wisely through techniques such as precision farming, which utilizes satellite technology to place fertilizer and chemicals where they are needed and in the amounts that are needed.

"While it is nice to be dependable," says Combest, "it would be nicer to be known for that dependability. That is where National Ag Day begins, appropriately on the first day of spring, March 20. This is more than the celebration of the hard work of the men and women involved in agriculture - it is an education of sorts.

"The prior week, National Ag Week, promotes America's Largest Classroom on Agriculture. Recognizing today's students as tomorrow's consumers, the Agriculture Council of America is dedicated to teaching future generations about the important role agriculture plays in daily life."

Caterpillar offers a line of seven different agricultural tractors and five combines to the agricultural market for use in a variety of crops.

Companies Share Ties

MINNEAPOLIS - Many of today's largest companies owe at least part of their bottom line to agriculture.

For example, Pfizer, which is in the headlines almost daily for the product Viagara, also develops and markets pharmaceuticals for livestock. Monsanto, which created products such as NutraSweet, is one of the largest biotechnology companies in agriculture. And Caterpillar, better known for its mammoth construction and industrial equipment, is a rising force in American agriculture, manufacturing tractors, combines and other equipment that is used daily on American farms.

Caterpillar Agricultural Products president Robert Strube, said Caterpillar sees tremendous opportunities in agriculture, and it is continually adding resources to meet the demands of this market. "In the past year, we've added several new products to our lineup, announced plans to construct a combine manufacturing facility near Omaha, Nebraska, and we've broadened our agricultural equipment manufacturing capabilities at our plant in DeKalb, Illinois."

Strube said Caterpillar's reputation for quality, strength and durability in the construction and mining industry has translated well in agriculture. "We became a leader by designing and manufacturing equipment that retains value for the contractors who purchase them," he said. "Our agricultural equipment is the same way. We strive to create equipment that brings the most value to the farmer and holds this value through its lifetime."

Caterpillar offers a line of seven different agricultural tractors and five combines to the agricultural market for use in a variety of crops. It also sells products such as skid steer loaders and telehandlers, which are used around the farmyard for duties such as cleaning barns and moving hay bales. In addition, Caterpillar diesel engines provide power for farm equipment such as irrigation systems and generators.

Strube said Caterpillar has introduced new technologies to farming that allow farmers to do more with less, thus increasing productivity and reducing costs.

Technology has been a primary reason agriculture has made such huge strides in recent decades, said Eldon White, president of the Agriculture Council of America. "Crop yields have risen, allowing farmers to feed the world without increasing the amount of tilled acres," he said. "In the end, it's the consumer who benefits from these changes, as food prices remain economical, while the quality and variety of food products improve and grow."

One innovation from Caterpillar is the use of tracks rather than wheels for moving across fields. "Track-type equipment is more fuel efficient, it offers superior traction and it can get into fields even when the soil is wet," Strube said. "It does this while compacting the soil less than wheeled tractors. In the end, this allows farmers to get more out of their equipment and out of each acre of land."

Caterpillar also has taken its service models for industries such as construction and mining and applied them to farming. "We are used to providing service in areas where it's not efficient to haul equipment into the shop each time it needs servicing," Strube said. "Caterpillar dealers go to the customer, rather than making the customer come to them, saving the customer time and improving the efficiency of the farming operation."

All of these changes at Caterpillar, Strube said, show that the company views agriculture as an important part of its future.

Profile Of The Farmer

• Nearly two million people farm or ranch in the United States. Almost 90 percent of U.S. farms are operated by individuals or family corporations. More than 15 percent of the U.S. population is employed in farm or farm-related jobs, including production agriculture, farm inputs, processing and marketing, and wholesale and retail sales.

• According to the 1992 Census of Agriculture, 47 percent of the farmers were 55 years of age or older which was up only two percent from 1987. During the same period, there were two percent fewer farmers under the OVERLAND PARK, Kansas — Whether you're talking about cosmetics, football or pizza, it all starts with agriculture.

Agriculture touches our lives day-by-day in ways we don't realize. And the 1999 National Ag Day campaign, "America's Largest Classroom on Agriculture" is helping students across the U.S. learn "A" through "Z" about America's largest industry.

American agriculture ... Growing the understanding of Tomorrow's consumers ... Growing Tomorrows for everyone.

"Growing Tomorrows" is captured in a commemorative painting where creator Jim Fanning illustrates the recognition of today's students as tomorrow's consumers. In this painting, a farm family has joined an urban classroom to share the many ways that agriculture interacts with us everyday.

This celebration of today's students can be yours to enjoy yearlong. A limited edition print of the painting is available for $49.95 by contacting 1-888-98AGDAY.

As part of "America's Largest Classroom on Agriculture", school children across the nation will take time, March 15-19, 1999, to consider how almost everything we eat, wear, and use starts with agriculture. During the week leading up to National Ag age of 45.

• Forty-two percent of U.S. total land area is farmland (945.5 million acres.) In 1900, the average farm size was 147 acres compared to 491 acres today.

• The top five agricultural commodities include: cattle and calves, dairy products, corn, soybeans and hogs. U.S. farmers account for 42.7 percent of the world's production of soybeans and 34.4 percent of the world's production of corn.

• Farmers and ranchers are independent business people who provide for their families by growing and producing food and fiber. They use modern production techniques to increase the quality and quantity of the food they produce. In the 1960s one farmer supplied 25.8 persons in the U.S. and abroad. In 1994, one farmer supplied food for 129 people in the U.S. and abroad.

The Changing Face of Agriculture

• Farmers and ranchers are producing meat lower in fat and cholesterol. This has resulted in retail cuts that are 15 percent leaner, giving consumers better value for their dollar. For example, a pork tenderloin now has only one more gram of fat than a skinless chicken breast, one of the true fat "lightweights." Also, much leaner beef cuts are being produced than 20 years ago, resulting in 27 percent less fat reaching the retail case than in 1985.

• Research and advancements in biotechnology are now in the market place with tastier fruits and vegetables that stay fresh longer and are not damaged by insects.

• A new technique called "precision farming" boosts crop yields and reduces waste by using satellite maps and computers to match seed, fertilizer and crop protector applications to local soil conditions.

• Farm equipment has evolved dramatically from the team of horses used in the early 1900's. Today's four-wheel drive tractors have the power of 40-300 horses. This makes for a large capital investment, as farmers pay anywhere from $97,000 for an average 160 horse-power tractor to $170,000 for a four-wheel drive model.

• As the amount of mechanization and horse power in farm machinery has increased, the time needed to complete tasks has decreased. Combines, huge machines used to harvest grains such as corn, soybeans and wheat, have dramatically changed agriculture. In the 1930's, before the machines were available, a farmer could harvest an average of 100 bushels of corn by hand in a nine-hour day. Today's combines can harvest 900 bushels of corn per hour—or 100 bushels of corn in under seven minutes.

• The efficiency of U.S. farmers benefits the United States consumer in the pocketbook. U.S. consumers spend approximately nine percent of their income on food compared with 11percent in the United Kingdom, 17 percent in Japan, 27 percent in South Africa and 53 percent in India.

Chairman, Agriculture Committee of House of Representatives.

With the same confidence that we turn on the faucet and instantly have reliable drinking water, we reach into our refrigerators for food and open our closets for a fresh shirt.

Most folks simply do not think about what it takes to get water, nor the efforts to get food and clothing. The reliability of our food and fiber is rarely ever in question. And that reliability is due to agriculture in America - producers, processors, transporters and marketers. Being dependable, agriculture is taken for granted by a large segment of our population.

While it is nice to be dependable, it would be nicer to be known for that dependability. That is where National Ag Day begins, appropriately on the first day of spring, March 20 of this year. This is more than the celebration of the hard work of the men and women involved in agriculture, it is an education of sorts. The prior week, National Ag Week, March 14 - 20, promotes America's Largest Classroom on Agriculture. Recognizing today's students as tomorrow's consumers, the Agriculture Council of America is dedicated to teaching future generations about the important role agriculture plays in daily life.

Farming families will travel to Washington, D.C., where agricultural policy is made, to answer questions about rural life from students in urban schools.

More than learning that their carton of milk came by way of a dairy cow, students will have a positive exposure to just what ay, March 20, 1999, ACA will rovide educators with materials at help students discover the portant role of agriculture in ily life.

ACA introduced the "America's Largest Classroom on Agriculture" campaign in September, 1998. This new campaign will involve existing ag literacy programs such as Ag in the Classroom, Project Food, Land & People, 4-H, the National FFA Organization and others. Together, the agricultural community will engage hundreds of volunteers and organizations, during the week of March 15-19, 1999, to assist in the education of students about the exciting role agriculture plays in our modern lives.

"The vision of this new National Ag Day Campaign," said Joyce Spicher, chairperson of ACA, "is to coordinate existing efforts in agricultural literacy and reach classrooms with exciting new materials that help students learn about the vital role agriculture plays."

The Agriculture Council of America, composed of leaders in the agricultural, food and fiber community, dedicates its efforts to increased Ag Literacy through the coordination of National Ag Day.

agriculture in America means to Americans - and in feeding a hungry world. They will also learn just how much is involved in bringing food to the table.

As a former teacher, I know firsthand the importance of a quality education, and the positive impact education can have in improving the understanding of agriculture. Careers abound in agriculture: farm production, management and marketing, research and engineering of new seeds and plant varieties, food science, processing, retailing, banking, education, landscape architecture, and urban planning, to name just a few paths young people may wish to follow.

All of us involved in agriculture have something to bring to the table. I have staked out an advocacy role for the Agriculture Committee as its new chairman. We in agriculture have quite a story to tell, and I welcome the opportunities taken to educate and advocate on behalf of agriculture in America. Growing up in the Panhandle of Texas, I played football, baseball and ran track in school, but I was really more interested in being involved in the Future Farmers of America. I was elected to the post of Area I President and enjoyed the opportunity to travel and represent the FFA around the country. And now, I'd like the word about agriculture to travel the country - through its many ambassadors: National Ag Day and National Ag Week, and in the many educational efforts, such as the web site of the U.S. House Agriculture Committee, http://www.house.gov/agriculture where we bring Today's Agriculture to internet visitors on and off the farm. I've written here about the benefits to agriculture in advocating on behalf of agriculture, but there are benefits in knowing about agriculture. Knowing more about agriculture makes for more informed consumers. Understanding the basics of farming and processing - more plainly, just what goes into the evening meal or that new cotton shirt - gives the consumer the edge in choosing the right cut of meat or the best blend of fabrics.

And in the end, an informed consumer more greatly appreciates just what it took to bring that product from the farmer's hands into theirs.

Larry Combest was born in Memphis, Texas on March 20, 1945, a fourth generation West Texas farmer, educator and small business owner. Combest brought his practical experience to Congress when voters of Texas's 19th congressional district elected him on November 4, 1984. Representative Combest recently advanced to the chairmanship of the House Agriculture Committee in the 106th Congress which convened on January 6, 1999.

Studies Confirm That Poultry Workers Experience Health Risks

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

MANHEIM (Lancaster Co.) — Poultry house workers who use proper breathing equipment and protect their health in confinement operations are safer than most operations in the rest of the world, according to a Penn State extension veterinarian.

But in researching various types of exposure risks, Dr. Bhushan M. Jayarao found some surprising information on a review of the published results on studies of how confined operations affect the health of workers.

In general, broiler houses don't fare as well as poultry houses. According to the extension veterinarian, broiler houses consistently show a higher amount of dust, greater ammonia levels, and higher endotoxin levels than layer houses.

Jayarao discussed the results of his findings in literature searches on occupational disease on a search of peer-reviewed scientific publications through the PubMed service in the Library of Medicine. He spoke to more than two dozen poultry producers and agri-industry representatives Monday afternoon at the Penn State-sponsored Poultry Health and Management Seminar at Kreider's Restaurant.

In the past 20 years, however, a lot of changes have taken place. Scientists have a better understanding and knowledge of disease-causing agents, they can detect disease carriers a lot better, and producers have responded by making the houses a lot healthier for people and birds.

The research looked at five different countries and poultry house health, including Denmark, England, Germany, Netherlands, and the U.S., and was published in 1984.

Overall, in broiler houses, the U.S. led the other countries in lowest amount of agents overall, with one of the lowest inhalable dust (4.4 milligrams per cubic meter). The lowest was Denmark at 3.8. The U.S. had the lowest respirable dust at .24 milligrams per cubic meter, the lowest inhalable endotoxin at 61 nanograms per cubic meter, and one of the lowest respirable endotoxin at 15 nanograms per cubic meter (Denmark had the lowest at 6). The U.S. also recorded one of the lowest ammonia levels, at 25 parts per million (ppm), within the levels established by monitoring and regulatory agencies. The lowest ammonia levels in this study were recorded in Denmark, at 8 ppm.

Poultry house workers who use proper breathing equipment and protect their health in confinement operations are safer than most operations in the rest of the world, according to Bhushan M. Jayarao, Penn State extension veterinarian, center. At left is John Schwartz, Lancaster extension director and at right is Mike Hulet, Penn State professor of poultry science.

For undocumented reasons, Germany recorded the highest levels of inhalable endotoxins, at 6,000 nanograms per cubic meter. Also, the highest levels for ammonia were 27.1 ppm in England.

What the studies pointed to, generally, was that endotoxins are higher in broiler than layers and ammonia levels are also higher compared to layers in the study.

Dust particles come from a variety of sources, including automated dry-feed handling systems, feces and feathers, dust mites, manure particles from birds on solid floors, and viral, bacterial, and

Hesston Forage Harvesters Model 7155S

The secret to low-cost forage harvesting.

It's no big secret that whole-stalk corn silage produces 40 to 50% more digestible energy over corn harvested as grain.

The big secret is how economically and efficiently you can harvest it with a Hesston® 7155S Forage Harvester.

More cutting power.

Designed for the average-sized livestock producer, this small machine packs a big punch. Its "straight-thru crop-flow" design puts more power into cutting, less into handling the crop. That means greater field efficiency year after year.

The 7155S easily handles tractor PTOs from 90 to 175 hp, and is available with 2-row corn silage header or 6-foot-wide hay pickup.

Fingertip control.

Electro-hydraulic remote control puts harvesting functions at your fingertips, and the 1,000 rpm drive assures big capacity.

This season, make silage more efficiently and economically – with a new Hesston 7155S. See us today.

fungal agents on particulate matter, noted Jayarao. Breathing dusty air for an extended time causes chronic bronchitis, reduced capacity to inhale and exhale oxygen, increased risk of contracting colds, episodes of flu-like illness with fever, and adverse allergic reactions. Tolerance is about 5 milligrams per cubic meter.

Bacterial endotoxins are also present in houses, but respiratory health effects of such exposures have yet to be determined. "We know that they're dangerous, but what is the concentration and how do you have to be exposed?" said Jayarao.

Ammonia, from manure, can be readily detected by the human nose, according to Jayarao, at levels of 1-5 ppm. At levels of 6 to 20 ppm or greater, ammonia is an eye irritant and can cause respiratory problems. Over 100 ppm levels for one hour causes irritation of mucous surfaces. At 5,000 ppm, ammonia causes respiratory spasms and rapid suffocation. At greater than 10,000 ppm, it kills.

A vastly more toxic gas expelled by poultry manure is hydrogen sulfide, known as the "silent killer," said Jayarao.

Normally it smells like a rotten egg, in low doses (the human noise can smell it as low as .0002 parts per million). But at higher levels, the olfactory lobes in the human body can't detect it. At 10 ppm, it causes eye irritation; at 200 ppm for one hour, it causes dizziness, respiratory symptoms, and pneumonia-like conditions; at exposure of 600 ppm or more, rapid death will ensue.

Agitating a large manure pit creates higher volume of the gas, and cases of death from exposure have been widely reported, according to the veterinarian.

In a study conducted in Norway in 1997, chronic bronchitis was observed. On 8,634 farmers interviewed, for work time, years of exposure in farming, production type, and a combination of work exposure with personal habits, the conclusion was that working in dusty environments over time increases the risk of contracting chronic bronchitis by two- to three-fold. But smoking increase the risk up to six-fold.

In a study examining the respiratory health profiles of poultry workers in South Africa in 1988, 37 percent of the workers exhibited a work-related cough, 23 percent work-related wheeze, and most complained about eye, skin, and nose irritation.

At medium exposure to organic dust, 13 percent exhibited symptoms of asthma, 11 percent at high exposure, and 4 percent at low exposure.

In a U.S. study in 1991 of 59 chicken catchers, many reported a high rate of acute symptoms associated with work in poultry houses. Of the workers, 39 percent had chronic phlegm and 27.1 percent had chronic wheezing. The conclusion of the study: chicken catchers are at risk of respiratory dysfunction.

Along with lung problems, exposure to disease-causing elements in confinement operations also increases the risk of developing allergies, dermatoses (bacteria exposure as a result of abrasions and cuts, in addition to warts and eczema), chlamydia, and other agents, including campylobacter, salmonella, viral and other infections, according to Jayarao.

A "disturbing" development is how readily influenza virus can mutate, said Jayarao, and in the process become more pathogenic because of the intermingling of humans, pigs, and ducks on Chinese farms.

Workers in poultry processing plants also risk exposure to unhealthful elements. One study looked at a streptococcal infection in a chicken factory in Britain in 1980. There were 103 episodes in 82 workers, with the highest incidence in the packing department (the attack rate was 44 percent). The route of introduction and the spread remains unknown.

But process workers have been reporting, in several studies, higher incidence of warts, in addition to occupational injuries such as carpal tunnel syndrome, upper limb repetitive strain injuries, and "knuckle pads" for live chicken handlers.

In addition, Jayarao noted that in a study in Britain in 1986 there was a three-fold risk of death caused by myeloid leukemia and non-Hodgkin's lymphomas among workers. In a study in 1997 in the U.S., 2,639 poultry processing plant workers and 6,081 unexposed workers were examined. The results: there were increased risks of oesophageal, liver, and lymphatic system cancers in the workers.

In a study reported in 1985, 213 poultry house workers and 105 housewives were examined for dysmenorrhea and cold exposure.

Poultry house workers had a significantly higher prevalence of dysmenorrhea, or irregular periods (73.2 percent) compared to housewives (52.5 percent). Cold exposures influence menstrual processes.

The poultry industry, Jayarao concluded, needs to regulate itself. The health of workers — and of the birds themselves — can be improved by "reducing bird density or modifying housing conditions," he said. "Train your workers. That would be the most logical thing."

If the health of birds is suspect, the workers could also be facing unnecessary risks. Workers need more education on using respiratory masks. They should be trained and encouraged to use the masks, noted the veterinarian.

"It's for their own good, so they are not exposed to other kinds of infection," he said.

shows," Ron said "But we try to breed cows that look good and last a long time. We like a well-balanced cow."

At Gor-Wood-D, they have 80 excellent cows and more very good classified cows than you can count The Chief/Elevation cross back and forth has worked well, but they use a lot of different bulls including bulls from their own herd

They have 300 head of cows and 300 head of young stock They breed for type, components, udders, and feet and legs Owned by Gordon Tim and Ron Wood, they farm 3,000 acres

In all, the group from Lancaster saw at least 136 excellent cows and more than 225 very good cows. After being impressed with the quality of cattle they saw, one Lancaster dairyman jokingly said, "They must have a special air up here that causes cows to come out with such high type." But in reality, the tour group agreed it was the exceptional farm families with special acquired abilities to breed great cows that really made the difference in the wonderful herds visited on this year's Lancaster County annual Holstein tour

To the Jacksons, Lants and Woods, the Lancaster Holstein breeders say a big thank you for sharing your beautiful farms and cows with the tour group And to the Lancaster Holstein tour committee, Dave Wenger, chair, Larry Kennel, Joe Wivvel, and Mark Welk, a big thank you for planning such a great "barn meeting on a bus"

Two Dairy Breed Groups Combine For Convention '99

FREDERICK, Md. — The national Brown Swiss and Ayrshire associations are to hold the first-ever national joint convention of the dairy breed organizations, July 14-17, at the Turf Valley Hotel and Conference Center, near Baltimore, Maryland.

The Maryland Brown Swiss Association and the Maryland Ayrshire Association are serving as host organizations for the event.

A joint convention logo was developed for the historic occasion, and the Turf Valley facility was selected for its accomodations, as well as its proximity to a spectrum of educational, entertaining and historical institutions, landmarks and sightseeing attractions.

The black, gold and red logo features head profiles of both Brown Swiss and Ayrshire cows, black-eyed susans (Maryland's state flower), an outline of Maryland, and the Maryland state flag.

It is to be used for all convention promotional items, such as letterheads, advertising, etc.

Maryland's dairy community is proud of its heritage as well as its current accomplishments. Its Brown Swiss and Ayrshire breeders have long been recognized for outstanding achievements in breed development, both in the show ring and in production.

According to a news release from the associations, because of the respective successes of the state organizations, "The idea to combine efforts and talents to cooperate on a joint convention was born. This project has gained momentum and support throughout the year from the industry, other state breed associations, and breeders, all realizing joint cooperation is a key factor to maintaining a strong position in the dairy industry as we approach the 21st century."

In 1989, Maryland served as the host state for the national conventions for the Brown Swiss and Ayrshire breed organizations. "Ten years later, we have joined forces to roll out the red carpet for old and new friends, breeders and guests," according to the news release.

National convention co-chairpeople representing the Maryland Brown Swiss Association are Bill and Cindy Warner, while Martha Clark and Becky Long Chaney are co-chairpeople representing the Maryland Ayrshire Association.

A steering committee, comprised of members from both organizations, has been working to develop the groundwork for the convention.

Each association is to hold independent spring meetings, during which volunteers are to be sought to help with convention committees and duties.

While final details are still to come, some plans have been established.

Wednesday, July 14, the convention is to kick off with a "Joint Welcome Reception and Ceremony" featuring a genuine Maryland seafood buffet.

In addition to the special meal, other evening highlights are to include special political entertainment, Maryland dignitaries and representatives from the agriculture department.

However, even prior to that, plans are being developed for pre-convention tours on July 13 to Washington, D.C. and Baltimore, as well as other sites of interest.

In addition to the special joint welcome ceremony and banquet, planned for the day on July 14 are a golf tournament, preliminary rounds in the dairy bowl competition, interviews of the Ayrshire princess and Brown Swiss ambassador candidates, and a youth pizza party and dance to music provided by a disc jockey.

The outline of activities for Thursday, July 15, includes a joint buffet breakfast, tours to Washington and Baltimore, and Ayrshire banquet, a fun acution, senior slide show presentations, crowning of the Ayrshire princess, a Brown Swiss banquet and presentation of the Brown Swiss ambassador program.

On Friday, July 16, there are to be separate breakfasts for youth, women, and men; motivational speakers; announcement of the Brown Swiss youth achievement winner; Ayrshire outstanding youth winner; the final rounds of the dairy bowl competitions; the national Brown Swiss annual meeting and awards luncheon; viewing of Ayrshire and Brown Swiss convention sale animals; the national Ayrshire convention sale; and a Brown Swiss supper and fun auction.

On Saturday, July 17, there is to be a tour to the farm of David Patrick, located near the convention site. Patrick is president of the National Ayrshire Association. Breakfast is to be served at the Maryland Fairgrounds, followed by the national Brown Swiss conventions sale.

Also on Saturday, baseball fans can also take in a home game of the Baltimore Orioles.

Md. Brown Swiss Breeders To Meet

FREDERICK, Md. — The annual meeting of the Maryland Brown Swiss Breeders Association is to be held 7 p.m., March 27, at the DanDee Family Restaurant in Frederick, according to a recent news release.

According to the notice, those listed as current members have been invited to attend the meeting directly by mail, by banquet organizers Scott and Judy Hood of Middletown, Maryland.

The deadline for responding to the mailed invitations is March 20.

Following the banquet meal, leadership is to recognize members for outstanding achievements and accomplishments during the past year, followed by the business meeting.

A highlight of the business meeting is to be a report on the joint conventions in July in Maryland of the national Brown Swiss and Ayrshire associations.

The co-convention, set to be held July 14-17 at the Turf Valley Country Club and Resort near Baltimore, is being planned by committees comprised of members of both organizations, and help is being sought from Maryland breeders and families. Those interested in helping with the convention planning should contact the association.

An election of officers is also to be held during the meeting.

The featured speaker for the banquet is to be John Meyer, executive secretary of the National Brown Swiss Association in Wisconsin.

Meyer is to update members on the focus and direction of the national organization, as well as discuss business concerns, such as potential export business.

He is to also discuss the Bruna 2000 and World Conference, which is to be held in conjunction with the Oct. 4-8, 1999, World Dairy Expo in Madison, Wisconsin.

For more information on the March 27 annual meeting, call Scott and Judy Hood at (301) 473-5052.

For information on joining the Maryland Brown Swiss Association, or for renewing membership, call Julie Mayer, association secretary at (410) 775-0047.

Pa. Brown Swiss Meeting March 27

AIRVILLE (York Co.) — The Pennsylvania Brown Swiss Association has announced its spring meeting is to be held 11 a.m., March 27, at the Harrisburg Hilton Hotel.

There is no cost to attend the meeting, though reservations need to be made no later than March 20. Call Dean Daubert at (717) 769-7324.

The site of the spring meeting — the Harrisburg Hilton — has been selected by the state association as the site for the 2000 national Brown Swiss Convention.

Discussion items on the agenda for the meeting are plans for the 2000 national convention, and the 1999 membership drive.

Also on the agenda are recognitions of high production awards tested and documented through the Pa. Dairy Herd Improvement Association.

The meeting is open to anyone with an interest in Brown Swiss cattle. For more information, call Dean Daubert.

For directions to the Harrisburg Hilton, located along 2nd Street in the city of Harrisburg, call the hotel at (717) 233-6000.

Global Positioning Technology Helps Determine Nutrient Needs

CAROLYN N. MOYER
Tioga Co. Correspondent

MIDDLEBURY CENTER (Tioga Co.) — The six-wheel vehicle slowly moves across the field, pausing only to extend its probe into the Earth's crust. High-tech connections beam the exact location of the sample from remote satellites to an onboard computer, forever etching the location on the map.

While some people associate satellite positioning with covert military action or a 1960s science fiction movie, the fact is satellites touch our lives in every day ways from weather forecasting to turning on the television. Now the technology has come to the farm as agronomists track fertility levels of fields and mark exact locations of field soil samples on a map.

Why, you might ask, is there a need to know the exact position from which the sample was taken? According to David Potter who has done extensive Global Positioning Systems (GPS) field trials with Agway, the variation in nutrient needs across a five-acre field, for example, are tremendous.

"The main reasons for using it are really still developing," said Potter. "It started out as being a mapping technique and that's what GPS, per se, is. It's the location on the Earth."

With this technology, the accuracy of acreage measurements is unsurpassed.

"It draws a three dimensional map and can measure up the hills where the aerial photos only measure flat acreage," said Potter.

Agway started using this technology about five years ago because they wanted to combine mapping techniques and soil sampling.

"We had a pilot program with five farms for three years, ending last season, just to see if it was something for our smaller farms in the hills," said Potter, tTo see if it was really useful. As Agway was doing it, they saw that it had some possibilities."

Tim Wood of Gor Wood D Holsteins thinks that the technology definitely has applications for Northeast farmers.

"I've talked to guys in the Midwest and they have trucks that can put different amounts of nutrients on the right parts of the fields," said Wood. "Our biggest field is 61 acres and there's a distinct change in soil types and fertility levels in that field. I can't imagine the applications for the larger fields," said Wood.

This is the third year that the Woods have taken advantage of this technology.

"Hopefully we'll get a little more bang for our buck!" he said enthusiastically. "Even though we're paying for this service, the theory is that we'll recoup our costs by putting the right fertilizers on the right spot and not putting it where we don't need it," Wood said. "This is a good situation for people around here. One person can't justify the expense in owning this equipment to make these maps, but if they're making it available for a set dollar fee per acre, I think I can take advantage of that."

Through the field trials, Agway found out which services were the most necessary.

"We're putting more emphasis on the record keeping," he said. "We're saying this is great, we can make very accurate maps, we can use yield monitors that can go right on the combine to give you the yield across the field, but we said we need records and history so that we can, after two or three years, start to analyze this."

Besides having the actual map of the fields, the computer can record information on the map that relates to that specific field.

"Those maps are like transparencies. You can pull up pH and the soil association that it's in and the yield and the variety and you can put them on top of each other, they're like transparencies, and you can start to see if there's a relationship."

What they've found is that there are so many interrelationships that they also need a method to record and compare this information in order to gain good long-term records and to measure the amount of improvement.

Record keeping is nothing new to many farmers who have always kept track of crop rotation, manure management, or other practices. This added technology adds a new dimension to record keeping.

Wood agrees that having a detailed map coupled with a record of what was actually put on and taken off that field will be an asset.

"I believe that if this goes the way I think it can, my records would be such that I can show any agronomist what I put on and when

This six-wheel drive all-terrain vehicle is driven across the field to gather soil samples. An onboard computer links the sample point with satellites, marking the exact location from which the sample was taken. Readings of longitude, latitude, and altitude are taken every second and soil samples are taken every 10 feet.

the soil samples were taken and where the soil samples were taken and what was taken off. In the end it will all tie together so we will have a complete picture of what we did, so we don't need to rely on memory. This takes a little more of the guesswork out of it," said Wood.

Right now the software programs for detailed record keeping are still in development, but several major companies have jumped in to the applications for this technology.

"They emphasized the application end of it. What they have is actually mind-boggling. There are trucks that will actually mix your fertilizer on the go so you can prescribe your fertilizer to change as you go across the field."

He is quick to point out, however, that those applications probably won't be seen in the hills of Pennsylvania right now because of the high cost and the smaller field size.

Another developing technology is using four-wheelers that are equipped with a GPS unit that can be set loose without a driver to spray pesticides.

"We may well go to a situation with one man controlling six or seven four-wheelers running around the field. They will just go in a set path and maintain patterns. When they're empty, they will just stop and wait to be filled up again," he said.

In Pennsylvania the analysis possibilities are more important than anything, according to Potter.

There were three parts to the actual farm trials. First there was the actual GPS mapping and soil sampling. The second part involved working with an outfit in the Midwest to get fertility information and third to maximize record keeping.

The Midwestern laboratory made its nutrient recommendations based on base saturations rather than absolute fertility levels, putting much more emphasis on trace minerals and ratios.

"We did see a response to that," said Potter. "This area is actually too high in magnesium in relation to the calcium. Many fields are too high in the ratio and the effect is magnesium deficiency. So we started using some different fertilizers and got some response to that," Potter said.

Some changes have been made since the initial field trials.

Initial recommendations were to soil sample every year. They really didn't believe this was necessary every year because if a farmer keeps track of what goes into a field and what comes out of a field, the soil sample results can be predicted. Also they discovered that they didn't have to map again unless major changes were made in the fields.

Costs vary widely depending on which services are contracted. To map the fields, Potter charges $2.50 per acre, which can add up to a hefty charge, but Potter quickly adds that a good map could eventually save money when dealing with custom applicators.

"Number one, you've just developed a good numbering system, but on top of that you'll a good map that people can read. With a lot of our genetically engineered seeds that are coming down, the whole industry is changing. Pesticides could be passe in five years — we may be using all genetically engineered seed that have natural resistance. That's probably an exaggeration, but that's the direction we're going. Today, for example, we have Roundup Ready corn. Say an applicator goes to an employee and asks, 'what am I spraying?' That operator says, 'The third strip up from me.' Well, the operator was counting the three strips he went by, but there was also a little triangle down in the corner that was corn that the applicator counted, so the applicator sprays what was actually field two — and that wasn't Roundup Ready corn. Now you have dead corn," Potter said.

The ultimate goal for Potter, who is currently in a joint business venture with Cornell Brothers Agway of Middlebury Center and Reed's Feed Mill of Liberty, is to fine-tune management skills.

"After two to three years of history and good records, we may find out that a soil, no matter what, never does any better than average."

Wood agrees that he'd rather spend money to fertilize ground that will produce more than to push ground that will never perform any better.

"With us we can't afford to fertilize everything up to par and you have to make a decision what you're going to push. This gives you the information on which fields you're going to push and which you're not," said Wood.

Eventually this technology could allow for variable rate applications of fertilizer, lime, and pesticides, to maximize yields across the field.

"We'll begin with lime with a single rate application on a 10-acre field with an average pH of 6.6. If we went out and tested every acre, we might find that the field ranged in pH from 5.6 to 7.2. So we're actually spreading lime where we don't need it and aren't putting enough where we need it," Potter commented. "Spreading lime in conjunction with the GPS maps could allow the farmer to put the lime where it will do the most good."

What it all boils down to is better consistency.

The theory being that if you take the soil sample in the exact same spot, you're monitoring the field, not just showing a better reading because the sample was taken in a more fertile spot of the field.

"Now we won't just get a response, but we'll know why we got it," explained Wood. "If we have these kinds of records and a good soil test, we can see what happened."

First On The Scene

GAIL STROCK
Mifflin Co. Correspondent

OLD PORT (Juniata Co.) — You're the first one to come upon a farm accident. What's the first thing that's going to happen?" Dave Filson questioned participants at a First on the Scene training session near Old Port, Juniata County.

"You're going to panic," Filson informed. "And you will panic. People panic in different ways. The important thing is to recognize that it will happen and then deal with it. Get past it so you can think clearly."

Filson, County Extension director for Juniata and Mifflin counties, conducted this particular First on the Scene training session the end of February at the Turbett Grange Hall. The program was developed at Cornell University and sponsored locally by the Pomona Grange and Penn State Cooperative Extension. The program is intended for farmers, spouses, children, employees, managers, and anyone who is likely to be the first to discover a farm accident. While working through possible farm accident situations, participants learned how to make the right, and possibly lifesaving decisions in a logical way.

What's the second rule?" Filson asked.

"Keep yourself safe," group members responded.

"You have to stay safe. You're the only one who can help. If you endanger yourself," Filson explained, "you've complicated a serious problem. Your safety is more important than the victim's. Don't become an accident victim yourself."

Before beginning this session, Filson asked participants to introduce themselves. The group included former and current extension agents, FFA leaders and members, volunteer firefighters, farmers and their spouses, construction workers, truck drivers, a Juniata County commissioner, Grange members, and the information coordinator for the Juniata Safety Council. Nearly all had a personal story to tell — a parent's arm caught in a corn picker, a runaway tractor, baler, and wagon, pants stripped off instantly by a PTO. All agreed that farm accidents happen so quickly. All knew the importance of doing the right thing in the first crucial minutes.

Throughout the day, the group talked through the more common farm accidents — tractor overturns; PTO and machinery entanglements; grain bin, silo, manure storage, chemical, and electrical emergencies.

Filson began each situation with the same two questions: What's the first thing that's going to happen? Panic. What's the second thing you must do? Keep yourself safe. He then covered basic first aid and the important dos and don'ts unique to each situation. From then on, discussion centered on what if.

"Here's the situation. Your husband left with the tractor late morning and said he'd be back by noon. It's 2 p.m., and you decide to go look for him, and, after driving for 10 minutes to a remote field, this is what you find," Filson said as he placed a drawing of an overturned tractor with a man pinned underneath on the overhead projector. "What's the first thing that will happen? You'll panic. What's the second thing you must do?" Keep yourself safe.

"Is the scene safe for you to approach? Is there a fuel leak? Is the motor running? Is the motor gas or diesel? How do you shut it off? Could the tractor roll over? Is there a fire extinguisher on the tractor? Do you help the victim first or call 911? Where is the nearest help? A neighbor? A motorist on a nearby road? How will the ambulance attendants get to the scene?

Many decisions made in those first few minutes will depend upon the situation, the extent of the trauma, and how fast help can be contacted. But some definite rules apply, beyond the panic and keep safe stages. Here are just a few.

General rules:

- Before going to look for someone who might be involved in a farm accident, let someone know where you're going and why. Better yet, take another person with you (the buddy system). If you discover an accident, one person can go for help while the other helps the victim.
- Equip your farm with two-way radios and/or cell phones and fire extinguishers.
- Keep a copy of the Farm Accident Emergency Information sheet provided with this article at each phone in the house, barn, and vehicles.
- At least two members of every household should know cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR).
- Know your ABCs (airways, bleeding, cardiac), and do them in order.
- Learn how to turn off every tractor (diesel and gasoline) and every piece of machinery including silo and grain bin unloaders. Learn where electrical switches are and how to disconnect the power.
- Learn the signs of and how to treat shock.
- Hydraulic hoses can burst. Hydraulic fuel can be hot and flammable.
- Keep PTO shields in place. Hair, sweatshirt hood strings, and baggy or frayed clothing can become caught easily.
- Keep severed limbs dry by wrapping in plastic and putting on TOP of ice. Send along with the victim in the ambulance.
- Reassure victims that help is on the way.
- While waiting for the ambulance, reassure victim and gather blankets, tools, ladders, rope, or any other device needed for rescue.
- Learn how to turn on a grain bin or silo blower without turning on the unloading auger.
- The human body needs 20 percent oxygen to survive. An oxygen-limiting silo contains only 4 percent.
- Keep the Poison Control Center number by each phone. Take suspect containers to the phone with you for content information. Call the Poison Control Center before calling 911.
- In electrical emergencies, assume every wire is a hot wire. Learn where to turn off the power supply.

"Farming is a dangerous occupation. I've never known a situation where a farmer is completely caught up (with his or her work) and has nothing to do," Filson concluded. "There is always a sense of urgency, especially in spring and fall. It puts us off guard safetywise."

To schedule First on the Scene for your group or organization, call Dave Filson at the Mifflin County Extension office (717) 248-9618 or Juniata County Extension office (717) 436-7744.

PASA Workshops Offer Insight Into Working Alternative Farms

DAVID HIEBERT
Westmoreland County
Correspondent

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — The Pennsylvania Association of Sustainable Agriculture (PASA) met Feb. 12-13 at the Penn Stater Hotel and Conference Center for its eighth annual conference.

The theme for the annual conference is "Farming for the future" and this year it had the added theme of "Designing sustainable food systems."

More than 800 people registered for the two-day conference.

Pressure on all segments of traditional production agriculture caused by below-cost of production returns fueled high interest in the alternative agricultural options promoted through PASA.

Founded in 1992, PASA membership has grown to more than 600, according to Lauren Shorsher, staff employee for PASA.

Lyn Garling, secretary of the PASA boar of directors, presented an overview of the diversity of PASA membership.

According to Garling, in 1998, about a third of membership responded to a survey. According to survey results, about 60 percent of members are farmers; 38 percent are environmental advocates; and 31 percent described themselves as home or professional gardners.

Garling showed slide photographs of PASA producers taken in 1998. The photos depicted a range of activity from hogs to hoophouses, from fruits to forages, and from poultry to vegetable production.

She noted the commitment to these people made to reforming, or rebuilding, strong ties between farmers and consumers.

As an example of the way the PASA organization has attracted those interested in rebuilding a systainable food system, she 35 percent of members are certified to grow organic commodities, and 50 percent direct market their products to consumers.

The keynote speaker was William A. McDonough, who set the tone for the entire conference.

McDonough, in his position as dean of the School of Architecture, University of Virginia, is an admirer of Thomas Jefferson. According to McDonough, Jefferson had quoted the native Americans who advised, don't eat your seed corn.

McDonough talked a lot about children and "generational tyranny," meaning we should not be making decisions that destroy, in essence, our children's seed corn.

McDonough, well-known for his ideas and accomplishments, noted that one of the highest honors is to be recognized by your peers, but the highest is to be recognized by your children.

To design a sustainable system, McDonough said to follow a triangle of relationships — equality, economy and ecology.

In its simplest form, the three issues are addressed through finding a balance in each.

If the manufacturing, or the making of a product costs too much, the economy side is out of balance.

If workers don't earn a fair wage, or have to work in dangerous conditions, the equality side is out of whack.

The ecology side refers to the environmental creativity and ingenuity used to create systems or products.

The concept of a properly design sustainable system is developed further in a book McDonough co-authored with William Braungart, "The Next Industrial Revolution."

According to McDonough, an example of a food system design of the "Next Industrial Revolution" is creating packaging that provides fertilizer for soil, rather than pollution or litter.

Another example would be creating residential carpeting which could be returned to the manufacturer for recycling into new carpet.

The conference workshops followed the theme of the conference. There were three kinds of food systems presented — vegetables and gardens; orchards and fruits; and garden spaces in cities and urban areas.

The conference had a strong offering of workshops for small production vegetable growers.

In one workshop, Mary and Phil Faranda, of Farnada Farm, Holsopple, talked about maximizing the profits from their pumpkin crop by opening their farm for fun tours and educational activities for school groups.

Penn Stater Hotel Chef Ken Stout prepares for the Rotational Grazing Feast. He and PASA conference coordinator Lauren Shorsher formulated recipes for food donated by organic food producers, distributors and processors.

They use "Jack" — a 30-foot tall cold air balloon in the shape of a jack o'latern — to attract people from far and wide.

Visitors can buy pumpkins, gourds and take hay rides, but admission and parking are free.

Paul Hauser, of Maple Hill Farm, said he overcame his apprehension to market in an urban area when he discovered the needs of the innercity Philadelphia market.

He said the cash available to pay for goods provided an incentive to learn about the varieties of produce and customs of buyers at the innercity markets.

Now, he farms 23 acres to provide a variety of fruits and vegetables for sale at the Philadelphia market, including 12 to 15 varieties of tomatoes and such things as zucchini blossoms.

To help him get started in fulfilling customer demand, he bought a seed catalog for one particular customer, gave it to the customer, and said, "Show me what you want to buy."

Then he grew it on his farm and was able to offer it.

Hauser said he found that people in the city will shop at night, and that he moves product better by selling by the pound, rather than by volume.

Reflecting on his success, he said, "I came. I saw. I made a lot of money."

In another workshop, it was observed that growing food in the city can have its hazards, according to Kathy Lawrence, of Just Food, New York.

She talked about the New York City's 700 public garden plots that have helped alleviate some of the food problems for people there.

She said the good news is that alliances built through Just Food, between the anti-hunger and pro-economic development groups, are working.

But she said they are working too well.

The garden plot properties are attractive in the city, and the neighborhoods with gardens have been so revitalized to the point that the city has decided that the public gardens are too valuable to use to raise food, and should instead be sold for private use.

PASA Conference Features Rotational Grazing Feast

JUDY PATTON
Union Co. Correspondent

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) — It may sound like putting livestock on lush green pasture, but the Rotational Grazing Feast event of the Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture's annual conference actually featured delectable human entrees — literally from soup to nuts.

And all organically grown.

Conference coordinator Lauren Shorsher initiated plans for the feast and other conference meals last summer with calls to 47 organic food growers, distributors and processors in Pennsylvania, New York, New Jersey, West Virginia and Ohio, asking for donations of their products to feed the 830 participants of the PASA 8th annual conference, held mid-February at the Penn Stater Hotel and Conference Center in State College.

As soon as Shorsher knew what food was coming, she collaborated with Penn Stater Hotel Chef Ken Stout to design recipes using the available ingredients.

The result was tons of food arriving fresh and on time — no easy fete in mid-February ice and snow — to be made into dishes such as smoked pork with honey barbecue sauce, fricadellar with red cabbage, chilled poached trout with salmon mousse served with remoulade and chilpotle sauces, and wild mushrooms and brie soup.

As Shorsher said, "Now, that's chef-to-farmer networking!"

Another new feature of the conference that came with the Grazing Feast was to serve the food buffet style and have the huge crowd sit at small round tables to promote more conversation than could be done in previous years, when the banquet was served at large tables.

After the main courses and before dessert, PASA President Preston Boop announced the winner of the 1999 Sustainable Agriculture Leadership Award, which goes to the individual or organization which "exemplifies outstanding leadership and innovation in furthering sustainable agriculture in the state and beyond."

The winners were Ann and Eric Nordell of Beech Grove Farm in Trout Run.

The Nordells have raised organic vegetables for 18 years using draft horses instead of tractors for power in doing field work.

They are community leaders and speak to groups in the Eastern United States about soil maintenance through crop rotation and manure application.

Past award winners were Robert Rodale, Paul Keene, Dr. Herb Cole, Cass Peterson, Preston Boop, and Donald Weaver.

In other business, President Boop also commended the PASA directors and founders who are leaving the board. They are Cass Peterson, Lemont Garber, and Paul Shaw.

PASA was founded in 1992 in Millheim in Centre County, and now has 630 members.

"(Clark) cautioned against buying into the commonly held belief that 'mega farming,' particularly specialized mega farming, is agriculture's future," Shorsher stated.

"It's a philosophy that's been touted for years, but one which puts money in the pockets of the input-producers and the markets rather than those of the farmer," Clark said.

She also said that "The cruelest charade is that when family farmers have to leave their farming enterprise, farmers believe it's because there is something wrong with themselves. It's really a matter of policy, Clark maintained.

"After all, what other system encourages over-production while facilitating income declines. As yields go up, the farm population goes down."

Shorsher also said that three members of the USDA National Commission on Small Farms were also at the PASA conference to share solutions and innovations, as well as to provide encouragement to those who have already shifted gears and moved to sustainable methods of growing, living and consuming.

The conference featured 51 workshops, the majority presented by farmers involved with a variety of enterprises, from pastured pork production to community supported agriculture, to selling directly to upscale urban restaurants.

There was also a first at the conference, a "rotational grazing feast," that was prepared with food grown and donated by farmers, processors and distributors throughout the region. Those foods also provided lunches and an evening reception buffet.

"Countless people went to incredible lengths to help get these foods to the conference center fresh and on time," Shorsher said. "Special thanks goes out to Chef Ken Stout of the Penn Stater Hotel. If it were not for him, this undertaking would not have been possible."

Pork Production In Pennsylvania

Dr. Kennet B.Kephart

Pork production goes on in the midst of the lowest hog prices in thirty years, and perhaps the worst economic crisis ever for pork producers. To add to the difficulty, opposition to swine production is intensifying across Pennsylvania. People attend public meetings to voice their concerns over water and air pollution, loss of property values, and a change in neighborhood aesthetics. Some townships have drafted ordinances that trigger restrictive set back and odor regulations on new farms that house as few as 101 hogs.

Public perception of the pork industry seems to be at an all-time low due to a variety of issues. For example, effective solutions to odor emissions are just beginning to emerge. Manure handling accidents, while sometimes exaggerated and widely publicized, have nonetheless occurred, and often because of negligence. The good news is the swine industry is recognizing that the first step to improving it's dismal image is to behave responsibly.

The National Pork Producers Council has developed programs on a number of fronts to help meet these challenges. For example the Pollution Prevention Strategies Program helps recognize producers who strive for environmental excellence. More importantly, through this program, producers can learn strategies for improving their environmental stewardship. In the pastthree years there have been more than 130 environmental audits of Pennsylvania swine operations conducted through this program.

A second program, just underway in this state, is the On-Farm Odor and Environmental Assessment Program. This effort provides a more intensive evaluation of a producer's environmental efforts, and delivers detailed documentation of the producer's strengths and challenges in regard to odor control and nutrient management. Bob Mikesell, who is hired jointly by the Pennsylvania State University, The Pennsylvania Pork Producers Council, and the National Pork Producers Council, coordinates this program in Pennsylvania.

Last year, The National Pork Producer's Council participated in an Environmental Dialogue on Pork Production. The eight-month discussion among pork producers and regulators culminated in published guidelines for environmentally sustainable pork production.

Here in Pennsylvania, Bob Mikesell and I, with help from producers across the state, recently completed a similar effort to provide recommendations that are specific to Pennsylvania. This document, which will be published in early 1999, is entitled "Environmental Standards of Production for Larger Pork Producers in Pennsylvania". The publication, which includes many recommendations that exceed current regulations, provides standards under which we believe Pennsylvania producers should operate.

Senate Resolution 91 recently called for Penn State to develop an educational program to certify livestock producers in Pennsylvania. This voluntary program will be a joint effort of the Departments of Dairy and Animal Science, Agronomy, Poultry Science, and Veterinary Science and will be developed by June, 1999

As odor-reducing technologies begin to emerge, many swine producers are anxious to implement strategies But they often find the wide array of reports and recommendations both confusing and expensive In the coming months, the Department of Dairy and Animal Science will be initiating a number of pilot projects throughout Pennsylvania to reduce odor from swine operations where conflicts are occurring. Thus, there are many, on-going efforts to help all producers address environmental stewardship

In addition, Penn State has taken steps to help the public understand the nature of pork production. I recently produced an educational video to show the public how we produce pork in this state The video has been distributed at public meetings, and to township supervisors and county planners I have spoken at dozens of public meetings to answer questions and concerns about hog production The message is not one of promotion or even an effort to change the minds of concerned citizens, in fact, view points are rarely changed The goal at the public meetings is to set the facts straight

It is important that the Department of Dairy and Animal Science be actively involved in what has become a state-wide controversy. I believe we are making a difference in pork producers' commitment to the environment. And because of that, we also can be confident that we are serving the needs of all rural residents of Pennsylvania - Dr. Kenneth B. Kephart

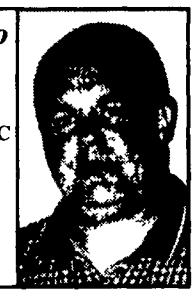
Dairyman To Dairyman



GEORGE CUDOC

Dairyman

QUESTION: Can heat damage of forage protein affect MUN? Our MUN has suddenly drop to 6. The current ration is 18 percent crude protein. What is wrong that the MUN is so low with what we think is more than enough protein?

ANSWER: When I first received this question, I went through the normal regime of asking questions about the makeup of the diet and the type feeding program that was used. As the questioning proceeded, it became apparent that something unusual was happening with these cows.

Past performance of the cows was improved by using MUN values to evaluate protein needs and usage.

Production increased in the herd when urea was added to the diet after the herd test showed the vast majority of the cows had MUN numbers between 7 and 9.

The trend of dryer haylage was believed to trigger the increased need for more soluble protein. The following test day showed an increase of 4 pounds milk and MUN values that had a range of 8 to 15 with an average of 11. Both the dairyman and feed advisor were pleased that using MUN information could be this beneficial.

The haylage continued to become drier and the cows again decreased in production. If the addition of soluble protein was necessary as haylage got drier the first time then why not now.

Replacing some distillers with soybean meal was done as more urea was not acceptable to the dairyman.

This pound for pound replacement increased total soluble protein by increasing percentage crude protein as well as percentage soluble protein.

This change seemed to have no effect, and on test day the cows had not only dropped back in milk, but also their MUN dropped to a level lower than the first month.

The call came in from the nutritionist and we agreed to meet at the farm the next week.

I was putting on my coveralls when I noticed a very recognizable odor. About 30 yards away, the feeder was loading haylage from a tower silo into the mixer for the morning feed.

The smell reminded me of a question that I forgot to ask.

Heat damage of protein fractions of forages can influence protein availability to our dairy cows. Does the drier haylage have higher heat damage than normal?

The nutritionist was down in the barn with the dairyman. We immediately discussed the heat damage.

The haylage was 20-percent crude protein with heat damage of 2.5 percent. The diet was formulated using 17.5 percent crude protein for the haylage.

This may be fine in some situations, but these cows were telling us that it was not.

Dietary changes were discussed, with the plan to raise crude protein of the total diet to 20 percent with the extra protein coming from sources that were higher in soluble protein factions.

The end diet raised crude as well as soluble protein. The cows had a quick response to this change. In just six days, the cows raised production 5.5 pounds. It will be another week until we can see new MUN values from the change. We expect to see MUN back near the acceptable 10 to 14 range. If not, a plan is in place to make further changes.

Again, we see the importance of allowing the cows to tell us what they need.

Industry trends and recommendations are of great importance, but cannot meet the challenge of every situation, every time.

We need help when they arise and the ones to help are our cows. In this situation, they told us what was wrong and by reacting, we improved their performance.

Farm Records - Article 39

In some of the first articles we addressed family needs, farm goals, herd goals, and management strategies Questions to be answered now are

- Is the management plan working?
- Is the business on track with its goals?
  What are its strengths and weaknesses?
- Are there problems in the making that can be squelched before they become costly?

A good set of records can help you answer many of these questions Good record keeping requires that you know what information you need, collecting and recording only that data which you will use, and then summarizing it in a form that is useful Make the best use of all the data that is available to you, not only that which you keep, but that which is also available from a variety of other sources and people, such as

Farm accountant	Crop consultant
DHIA	Nutritionist
Veterinarian	AI technician

Records can help you monitor the past and the present, and help to detect or predict future trends

1 Past performances are historic in nature You can't change the past, but what you learn from the past can help you plan for the future They can highlight past accomplishments, or point out problems that happened over time that need to be fixed or prevented in the future Examples of some records that are historic in nature are production averages, calving intervals, culling rates, death losses, etc

2 Current data can be thought of as current news or current history It tells you what has taken place in the last day or month These records are still in the making and can still be influenced by current management practices Examples are current daily milk per cow, current SCC count, current milk component tests, dry matter intakes, current feed prices, etc

3 Other data can give hints of future trends, and alert you to problems in the making These you can still change If you can detect them early enough you might be able to take early corrective action As a manager, you want to be looking for these opportunities so you can maintain better control over the future of your business Examples of this kind of data are

- Days to first service and days open They portray heat detection and conception problems and forecast future calving intervals and calving patterns
- Body condition scores at dry off and at calving times, DMI, fat tests, and forage tests run on feeds at harvest time, can predict future nutritional and metabolic problems
- Body scores, calving problems and MUN tests can predict future breeding problems
- Peak and persistency of production predict lactation yields and milk shipments
- Heifers and cows due to calve within six months predict future milk shipments
- Respiratory problems, coccidia-related scours, laminitis-related lameness in heifers, days dry, long days open and low conception rates also predict future milk yields
- PTA's on heifers and service sires predict genetic progress and future production

Classification Flexibility

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. — The Holstein Association has increased the flexibility of its classification programs even more and is also offering a rebate.

If producers contract to classify at least three times per year they can receive a 10-percent rebate on classification charges. Producers must specify in advance which months they want to classify. When all of the contracted classifications have taken place the rebate will be credited to their account.

Producers can also sign up to classify and pay a daily rate instead of a per-cow rate. This new pricing option is intended to reward producers who are very efficient and can use a day or more of classifier time.

Call the Association at 800-952-5200 to sign up for either one of these new options.

THE WORLD ECONOMIC CRISIS AND THE POULTRY ECONOMY

James Dunn, Professor Of Agricultural Economics

Beginning with the devaluation of the Thai Baht in July 1997, economic crises in a series of countries have undermined world commodity markets.

The currencies of Indonesia, South Korea, the Philippines, Thailand, Japan, Brazil, and Russia are all much lower against the American dollar than they were before the troubles began. The underlying reasons for these economic collapses vary, but their effects on U.S. producers of items sold into these markets do not.

As the cost of U.S. corn or poultry products rise because your local currency fails, you buy less American corn or poultry. If Brazilian soybeans are suddenly much cheaper than U.S. soybeans because the Brazilian real has lost half of its value, why buy American beans? The devaluation in these currencies has lowered purchasing power in these countries.

The secondary effects sometimes pull other countries down with them. The Australian and New Zealand dollars fell because their Asian customers could no longer afford to buy at the same rate. Certainly Japan is suffering because of the economic problems of most of their Asian trading partners.

With Brazil's problems hurting the rest of Latin America, including Mexico, and most of east Asia in a depression, most of our largest markets for agricultural exports are weak. Russia's situation is dramatically worse, since they don't have money to buy anything. Unless the U.S. government decides to subsidize food relief, exports to Russia of any kind are unlikely.

What does this mean for the poultry economy? The answer has two parts. In the simplest terms, the price of feed will be lower, but so will the price of meat and eggs. The grain markets are showing the effects of the combination of three successive good crops, combined with lower exports. Corn exports in the last crop year were 1.5 billion bushels, compared to more than 2.1 billion bushels in each of the 1995/1996 and 1996/1997 years. The 1998 crop was the second largest ever and the 1996 and 1997 crops were each nearly that large. The result is an expected ending corn inventory of 1.8 billion bushels from this crop year, which would be the most since the 1992/1993 crop year (another year of low corn prices).

With a normal 1999 corn crop, this inventory will depress the price for at least another year. The USDA forecasts of exports from the 1998 crop will be only 1.7 billion bushels, which will not help reduce the inventories. The situation for other feed grains and soybeans are comparable. Low prices are expected to continue for at least another year and, with normal crops, even longer.

The meat markets are all depressed. This is mainly because exports have stopped growing. The low food prices have stimulated production, especially of broilers. Broiler production is expected to rise 5-6 percent in 1999. However, U.S. broiler exports did not grow in 1998 and are expected to decrease further in 1999, after many years of growth. Decreasing exports to Russia are a major factor. Exports to Hong Kong have remained strong, as China appears to be resistant to the economic problems facing the rest of east Asia.

Brazil is one of the world's largest broiler exporters. The devaluation of its currency by 40 percent since mid-January makes Brazilian producers much more competitive. The problems in Brazil's domestic economy will likely depress Brazil's broiler consumption, making more of its production available for export.

Turkey and egg exports are similarly affected by the problems in the importing countries. An important consideration is whether these economic problems will continue to spread into new countries. Can the rest of South America weather the collapse of the Brazilian economy? And most importantly, can the United States continue to be an island of prosperity when so many of our trading partners are struggling?

We are in a worldwide depression of commodity prices. Our domestic economy is much broader than most of the countries having problems, but a sizable share of our economy has its prosperity linked to commodity markets, and troubles in these sectors can ripple through the remainder of the economy.

This unpalatable outcome need not occur for 1999 to be a difficult year for agriculture. For the poultry industry the year will be a balancing act. Will feed costs be enough lower to offset the weakness on the demand side because of weaker exports? The greater integration in poultry protects the farmers more than has happened in the red meat sector, but ultimately everyone is in the business together and bad times for one mean bad times for all.

Pa. Beef Expo

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — Junior activities will take center stage at the annual Pennsylvania Beef Expo.

Kicking off this year's list of activities is the Beef Skillathon, Saturday, March 27, 8 a.m. in the Penn State Ag Arena.

The Skillathon is an excellent opportunity for junior cattlemen to test their beef industry knowledge and learn important skills needed to be a successful cattle producer. By incorporating project skills and industry basics in a series of mini-learning stations, participants can test their abilities in areas such as identification of beef breeds, retail cuts, feed ingredients, quality assurance practices, food safety, EPD evaluations, and management decision making. Divisions for the skillathon include senior (16 to 21), intermediate (12 to 15), and junior (8 to 11).

A Beef Quiz Bowl competition is also scheduled for Saturday, March 27 with preliminaries from 9 a.m.-10:30 a.m. and finals at 2 p.m. in the Ag Arena. The Quiz Bowl competition will include two divisions, senior (14 to 21) and junior (8 to 13). County, club, or school teams consisting of four members in one division are invited to participate. Both contests are being coordinated by the Penn State Block and Bridle Club.

The Junior Heifer show will be held at 4 p.m. on Saturday in the Ag Arena. Upon completion of the heifer show, everyone is invited to attend the pizza party and dance to be held in the Mezzanine. Junior Showmanship will begin promptly at 8 a.m. on Sunday, March 28 with the Junior Steer show immediately following showmanship. Steers will be shown according to weight, with no breed classes.

All junior activities are open to members of the Pennsylvania Junior Cattlemen's Association. Individuals can join PJCA for $1 annual membership dues at the contest site.

For more information, contact Tammy Weaver at the Pennsylvania Cattlemen's Office, (717) 986-0333.

tion, rewritten by Hershey on March 1, called for a voluntary delay in construction. Even asking for a voluntary delay is an act of collusion, a violation of anti-trust laws, noted Meyer of NPPC. Hershey's proposal would "help bring slaughter hog supply and packer demand back into equilibrium," according to the proposed resolution.

Meyer noted that only a registered cooperative, such as a milk cooperative, can allow members to act to control price, as outlined by the Capper-Volstead Law. But two conditions must be met, he said. The members must be producers and they can't unduly increase prices. A working definition of "unduly" would be up to the courts.

Producers were divided by the proposal.

Jerry Hostetter, Denver, vice president of the LanChester Pork Producers Council, was vehemently against the proposal.

"I do not support any moratorium," said Hostetter, president of Hostetter Management Company, Lititz. "I believe in the free market economy that we have in America — not socialism. The government should not get involved in the swine business. When we ask the government to solve problems, I get concerned."

According to Hostetter, what affect would this have on packers who, knowing that Pennsylvania and other producers want to limit the supply, want to expand? And what of new processors who want to consider buying hogs from local producers — would they want to invest anything in hogs in the region knowing the producers voted for a moratorium?

Hostetter believes the industry is "overreacting" to the 10 percent increase in the amount of hogs in the country because of the loss of export markets, the Asian financial crisis, and the surge in Canadian imports. "Why are all these hogs coming in from Canada?" Hostetter said. "Some of these things we have to solve by ourselves, not by having the government come in and solve them for you."

In a letter on Feb. 19 to Donna Reifschneider, president of the board of directors to the NPPC, Hostetter noted the concerns packers could have if the moratorium would have passed. "If this becomes public that we as an industry support this, what does this do to the packers who are thinking of spending $20 to $50 million on expansion?" wrote Hostetter. "I urge the NPPC to let the free market economy work and not push for us to become like Canada or Europe."

Hostetter believes that many ag businesses are moving toward integration, the "farm-to-fork concept," and why should it be any different for the pork industry?

As reported in the Feb. 27 issue of Lancaster Farming, Brent Hershey, who proposed the moratorium, believes the hog "supply and demand system is completely out of sync. Industry experts tell us there are more hogs than the capacity to kill the hogs."

According to John Reininger, director of fresh pork sales for Hatfield Quality Meats, Hatfield, "from our perspective, we're at 75 percent capacity," he said. "We have room for 25 percent growth."

Hatfield spoke of its on-board bacon expansion program. He said Hatfield buys 40 percent of its hog out of state and 60 percent of its hogs come from Pennsylvania. "There's room to grow," said Reininger.

The question that processors such as Hatfield and others have, according to Reininger, "Do we really want to work with groups that put supply constraints on our industry?"

The moratorium, according to Reininger, was ill-conceived and did not give PPPC members enough time for discussion. He said that to debate the plan for the industry for approximately 60 minutes and to actually vote on it to carry to the NPPC shows "very poor planning," he said, "to make such a hasty decision with little review."

A producer who wished to remain anonymous said that more reasoning needed to go into what is happening in the marketplace and not to follow one person's proposal.

As of now, the issue of any kind of self-imposed moratorium on the PPPC's producers is a "dead issue," said David Reinecker, swine producer from York Springs and PPPC president.

Broom Sweeps Row Plastic Clean

FAIRBURY, Ill. — Rusty Leffingwell of Rusty's Ag Sales, has recently introduced a new product for strawberry and vegetable growers.

Called a Plasticulture Rotary Broom, the machine is specifically designed for strawberry and vegetable growers using plasticulture who need the plastic swept clean prior to new growth in the spring. This reduces the chance for disease carryover by removing the old growth.

The unit works on a 3-point hitch and utilizes the hydraulics of the tractor for height and speed control.

The broom is a sister product of the Strawberry Demulcher, which was designed to remove the straw mulch from matted rows in the spring, with no damage to the new growth. The Demulcher requires minimal horsepower and has low hydraulic requirements. The rotor height and speed are operator controlled and the rotor angle is adjustable. The Demulcher may also be used to replace mulch when it has been blown off the row by heavy winds.

The Demulcher has been on the market for several years and is available in several different models.

Leffingwell also markets a Strawberry Mulcher, which drops a canopy of straw over the berries for protection against winter freezing and thawing. The operator controls stopping and starting of application, and length of cut. The Strawberry Mulcher is a self-contained unit with a 13-hp Honda engine. The Mulcher may also be used to place straw or mulch between the rows for weed control and pick-your-own operation cleanliness and comfort.

Also opposed to the Compact were the International Dairy Foods Association, the Retail Merchants Association and the Pennsylvania Milk Dealers. In the early 1980s Penn State conducted a market study that showed that Pennsylvania retail milk prices generally follow the farmer price of milk, except when prices fall steeply. The PMMB minimum retail price for a gallon of whole milk will fall on April 1 by about $0.55. Perhaps the PMMB will report how many dealers and stores drop their prices to reflect the fall in farmer prices.

The Compact will help stabilize farm milk prices by setting "safety net" price based on local costs of production. Since September 1998, the Compact has not paid a premium because milk prices have been at relatively high levels. However, when the April blend price crashes in New England, the Compact will return more than a $1.50 per cwt. to farmers in the Compact area for that month. One dairy economist at the Compact Hearing estimated that the Compact will pay dairy farmers an average $0.60 per cwt. in 1999. This is good news for dairy farmers, who will see 1999 milk prices at levels substantially below 1998 levels.

Dairy farmers must tell their state and federal legislators that the Compact is important to them. Opponents have succeeded in convincing Harrisburg that Pennsylvania dairy farmers are divided, and legislators won't act unless you tell them that you support the Compact. I urge you to contact your legislators to let them know that you support the Northeast Dairy Compact. The Compact is good for Pennsylvania dairy farmers and consumers.

Holstein USA Offers Easy ID

BRATTLEBORO, Vt. — Electronic Application Software (EASY) from the Holstein Association is not only easy to use, it can now save dairy producers money too.

Effective immediately producers who register their animals using the combination of Holstein ID Tags and EASY will receive a $1 discount per animal.

It is more efficient for the Association to process registrations this way — Tags and EASY — and the discount is intended to share the savings in efficiency with customers taking advantage of these techniques.

EASY is a free Windows®-based program that is designed to simplify and speed up the registration process. This program allows producers to enter their account information only once.

With Holstein ID Tags producers have the option to use several combinations of Tags, Freeze brands and Tattoos to identify their animals, eliminating the need for sketches, or photos.

The combination of EASY and Tags creates savings in time and money for everyone involved.

Publication Examines Small-Scale Processing

MILLHEIM (Centre Co.) — Small-scale processing, a hot topic among producers, is the subject of a recently completed publication by Pennsylvania Association for Sustainable Agriculture (PASA) and Cornell University's Farming Alternatives program.

The "Adding Value for Sustainability" guidebook, a comprehensive publication on the subject of small-scale processing, is available for $8.50. The guidebook is an easy-to-follow, step-by-step guide to how producers can successfully incorporate value-added products into their operation.

Value-adding offers producers the potential to recapture a larger share of the food dollar. The producer's share of the food dollar has decreased from 46 percent in 1913 to 24 percent in 1997. By processing raw agricultural products into higher value consumer-ready products, producers have the opportunity to retain their income.

Value-added products can (1) offer a higher return than a raw product, (2) open new markets, (3) create brand recognition, and (4) add variety to a farm operation.

The guidebook outlines the struggles, opportunities, and lessons learned by four successful producers whose products include hot pepper jellies, pastured poultry, goat cheese, and fruit vinegars, sauces, and preserves

Agencies and communities working together to support value-adding activity through food processing incubators, trade associations, and new generation cooperatives is explained. Extensive lists of resources are provided. The guidebook is appropriate for cooperative extension agents, other agricultural professionals, producers, and others interested in small-scale processing enterprise development.

For more information or to order a guidebook, send $8.50 per guidebook plus $3 per guidebook for shipping and handling to Kirsten Markley, PASA, PO Box 419, Millheim, PA 16854, ksm6@psu.edu, at (814) 349-9856. Please make checks payable to "PASA."

Or you can order from Joan Padula, Farming Alternatives Program, Department of Rural Sociology, 17 Warren Hall, Cornell University, Ithaca, NY 14853, (607) 255-9832, jmp32@cornell.edu. Please make checks payable to "Cornell University."

Farm Bureau Seeks Farmer Self-Help Programs

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The leader of a Pennsylvania farm group today called on members of the U.S. Congress to enact legislation which will provide what he described as "self-help" programs for farmers.

Guy Donaldson, president of the Pennsylvania Farm Bureau, issued the call for action during a breakfast address to members of Pennsylvania's congressional delegation and about 200 Farm Bureau members.

The farmers, members of county farm bureau legislative committees, had spent the previous day visiting their congressmen to discuss priority farm issues and recommend action based on grassroots policy developed by the organization.

Pennsylvania Farm Bureau is a non-governmental, voluntary farm group representing 26,121 farm and rural families in 54 county farm bureaus. It is part of the nation's largest general farm organization, the 4.8-million member American Farm Bureau Federation.

"Self-help programs seem to be the answer to many challenges facing agricultural producers," said Donaldson, during his breakfast address.

According to Donaldson, one such program is the Northeast Interstate Dairy Compact. It currently operates in six New England states. It allows a commission, representing producers, consumers and government, to set a safety-net minimum farm price for milk sold for fluid consumption within the region.

"Right now, the Pennsylvania General Assembly is considering legislation that would expand the Northeast Interstate Dairy Compact into Pennsylvania," Donaldson told the congressmen. "It's not a governmental handout. It's self-help legislation."

The U.S. Congress will have to approve expansion of the Northeast Interstate Dairy Compact beyond its six original states of Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont in order for neighboring dairy states, such as Pennsylvania to participate. Donaldson urged lawmakers to vote for expansion of the Northeast Interstate Dairy Compact.

Another "self-help" proposal before Congress is a tax-deferred savings account for farmers, known as the FARRM account (Farm and Ranch Risk Management). Using these accounts, farmers would be encouraged to save 20 percent of their net farm income in higher income years by deferring taxes on the income until funds are withdrawn. Money put into a FARRM account would have to be taken out within five years. Donaldson said, ". . . this legislation would make it possible for farmers to help themselves, instead of going to government for assistance in times of economic stress."

Addressing the subject of Social Security reform, Donaldson told the congressional delegation, "We want individual taxpayers to have the right to shift their Social Security taxes to individual private retirement accounts." Farm Bureau opposes the direct investment of Social Security funds into the equities market by the government. Farm Bureau also opposes a decrease in Social Security benefits for retirees or near retirees, or an increase in payroll taxes.

On other tax issues, Donaldson called for elimination of both the capital gains tax and the federal estate tax.

"Farming is a capital-intensive business," Donaldson said. "The capital gains tax hurts agriculture and other businesses which invest in property and equipment." Donaldson explained that most capital gains in agriculture are the result of inflation.

"A farmer pays capital gains taxes when he sells his land," he said. "The average length of time that farmland is held 28.6 years. During that period the overall price level in the United States increases an average of 4.27 times. As a result, the farmer pays huge capital gains tax bills on inflationary rather than real increases in the value of their investments."

Donaldson also outlined Farm Bureau's reasons for favoring elimination of estate taxes which often force the sale of family farms, rather than allowing future generations to continue farming.

The death of one member of the family can directly impact the ability of the remaining family members to carry on the family farm because of excessive estate taxes.

"Elimination of the estate tax would give farmers another economic tool to operate a successful farming operation," Donaldson told those attending the congressional breakfast.

Addressing some other issues that need Congressional attention, Donaldson said that the Environmental Protection Agency's implementation of the new law regulating pesticides, the 1996 Food Quality Protection Act (FWPA), threatens the future availability of valuable crop protection chemicals.

"Registration of new crop protection chemicals has been slowed, not accelerated as heralded by FQPA," said Donaldson. Under FQPA, the EPA must reassess all pesticide tolerances by August 2006. Currently, the agency is developing rules for making those decisions.

"The agency is not using the 'best available information' when evaluating risk assessments for food exposure," Donaldson said. He called on lawmakers to contact EPA and urge the agency to implement FQPA as intended by Congress.

Donaldson also called on Congress to reform the federal crop insurance program. Farm Bureau is actively seeking reforms to crop insurance to provide a better risk management tool for producers.

"If the proper reforms are included, farmers will not only see the need for crop insurance, but they will also want to participate." Among changes suggested by Farm Bureau are increasing the subsidy on farmer premiums to make the program more affordable.

U.S., New Zealand Dairy Study Reveals Big Differences

DENVER, Colo. — New Zealand dairy cows are twice as fertile as United States cows. That's because the U.S. cows are bigger and produce a lot more milk, scientists said Tuesday, July 28, at the annual meeting of the American Society of Animal Sciences.

"We've got to take that into consideration when we were looking at New Zealand dairy research," said Matt Lucy, animal scientist at the University of Missouri-Columbia. "New Zealand results may not apply here, especially when we are trying to control estrus and improve cow fertility."

In a paper presented by MU graduate Chad Bilby, scientists from the United States and New Zealand compared cows in both countries. The New Zealand cows (Friesians) were pastured on rye grass and clover. The U.S. cows (Holsteins) were confinement-housed and fed a total mixed ration.

Bilby, now a research biologist for Monsanto Company, said the U.S. cows weighed 1379 pounds compared to 869 pounds for New Zealand cows. The U.S. cows produced an average of 75 pounds a day compared to 37 for the New Zealand cows.

First-service conception rates were typically 60 to 70 percent for the New Zealand cows and only 35 to 45 percent for U.S. cows.

"In dairy cows, high milk production and low fertility go together," Lucy said. "U.S. cows produce almost twice as much milk and are almost two times larger than New Zealand cows. U.S. cows are raised in confinement and given a high-energy diet, so they really maximize production.

"As a result, follicles on U.S. cows grow and regress much more slowly," Lucy said. Follicles are the egg-carrying glands in the ovary.

Cows in the study were given one Controlled Internal Drug Release (CIDR) device after surgical removal of ovaries. A second CIDR was inserted four to seven days later. Both devices were removed after a further four-day delay.

Even though treatment levels of progesterone, the fertility hormone, were the same in both groups of cows, the blood level of progesterone was lower in the U.S. cows. "That's probably because the U.S. cows are bigger and have greater blood volume, which dilutes the progesterone," Lucy said.

Plan Nutrient Needs For Whole Rotation

NORCROSS, Ga. — Nutrient management plans must consider the needs of the entire crop rotation. Even in continuous crop systems, it is a common practice to apply fertilizer only in alternating years where possible. This improves application efficiency, and may lead to better nutrient utilization. Higher rates can be applied at one time, fewer trips across the field are required, and applications may be timed to best fit the tillage system.

Base phosphorus and potassium recommendations on soil tests. Test soil at least once every four years, more frequently in build-up situations. It may be most practical to apply build-up applications immediately following the soil test, then follow a maintenance program in the years between soil tests, accounting for nutrients removed in the harvested crops. Alternatively, the build-up requirement may be distributed among the annual applications.

If soil tests are maintained at high levels, timing within the rotation is less critical, so long as the total nutrients applied across the rotation account for removal by all crops grown. If the rotation changes, or if yields are higher or lower than anticipated, planned applications can be adjusted accordingly. Maintaining high soil tests provides flexibility to skip — or reduce — application in years when financial resources are limited, as long as the deficit is made up in succeeding years.

When livestock manure is used in the program, proper credits must be taken in determining build-up and maintenance rates. Nutrient levels in manure vary, so base credits on nutrient analysis of the manure to be applied.

The nutrient management plan should also consider the soil types. If the soil has a high capacity for fixing phosphorus or potassium in unavailable forms, annual applications may be necessary. Timing and placement should also consider the tillage system, the rooting pattern of the crops grown, and any anticipated weather stresses.

Some special varieties of crops are beginning to be grown for specific grain quality or nutritional components which may affect the nutrient uptake and removal by the crop. These varieties may also require adjustment of the nutrient management plan when they are used in the rotation.

Nutrient management plans based on detailed information about the soil, the crops grown, and the climatic factors encountered can improve nutrient efficiency and increase yields and profits. When these factors are considered on a site-specific basis accounting for variability within the field, there are even more potential gains in efficiency. In this case, the variability in all crops in the rotation should be considered in formulating the plan. Newly developed geographic information system (GIS) data management tools make this kind of detailed analysis and planning practical.

Chemical-Resistant Parasitic Mites Kill Honeybees

HARRISBURG (Dauphin Co.) – The Capitol. Area Beekeepers Association will conduct its regular meeting and program March 19 at 7:30 P.M. in Room 309 here at the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture Building.

The program will feature a presentation on chemical-resistant parasitic mites and the research being conducted at Penn State.

David A. Bell, Jr., a doctoral student in the Department of Entomology at Penn State, will present on information based on his on-going research on chemically resistant paristic mites and their impact on honeybee colonies. Bell's research focuses on the investigation of Fluvalinate resistance in Varroa mites and the behavior of swarming honeybees. Fluvalinate is a specific chemical used to control the honeybee-killing Varroa mite. Bell received his bachelor's degree in molecular biology from Allegheny College and his master's degree in developmental genetics from Carnegie-Mellon University.

Parasitic mites, because of their impact on the health and survival of honeybee colonies, have become the center of interest for beekeepers since their discovery in the mid-1980s. Since 1994, some beekeepers in the capitol area have experience a high percentage of colony loss because of parasitic mites. Applying approved chemicals in a timely and as-directed manner are the only solutions to controlling parasitic mites.

The occurrance of chemically, resistant Varroa mites has sparked concern about the chemicals and Treatment Methodologies currently being used by beekeepers. This is a program all beekeepers should attend. A question and answer period will follow.

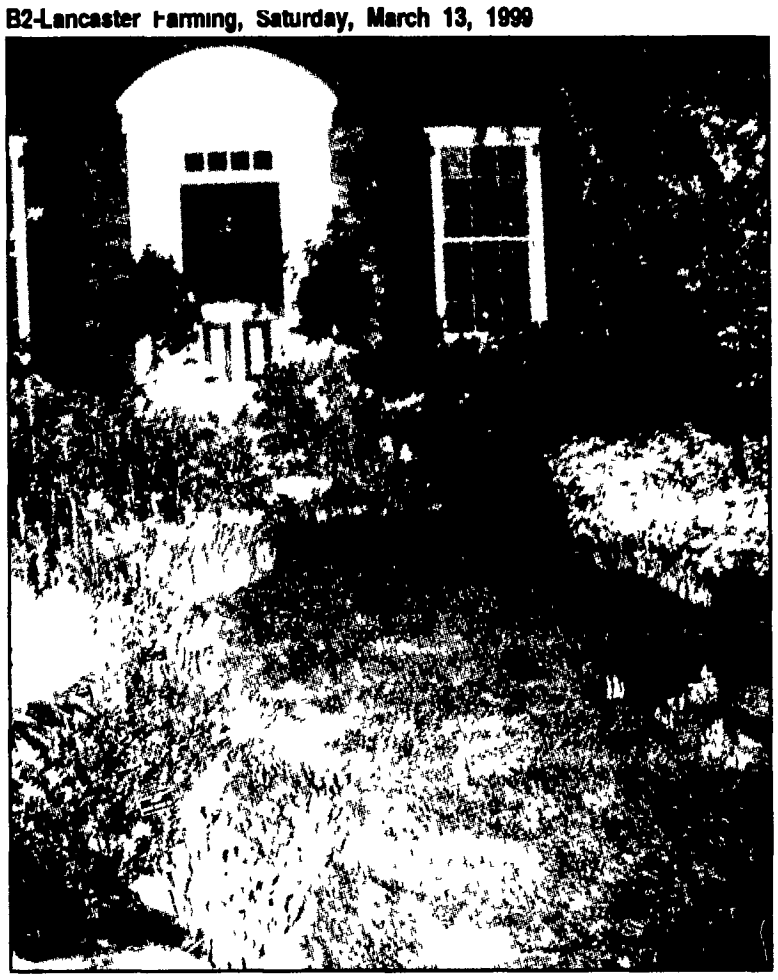
EQUAL HOUSING LENDER



To show off landscaping possibilities, houses and other buildings were erected inside the Convention Center and surrounded with profuse plantings of flowers, shrubs, and trees.

Profuse plantings of every imaginable flower introduces crowds to new and old favorites. In time for the show, plants needed to be forced to bloom without the aid of a normal growing season.

Gardening Possibilities

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

PHILADELPHIA — Photographs do little justice to the wonder and magic of the spectacular Philadelphia Flower Show. An annual event that is the largest indoor show of its kind internationally.

To grasp the magnificent landscaping displays on 10 indoor acres, you must see it. Savor the aroma of hyacinths and blooming perennials while strolling through the profuse colorful plantings, which show the possibilities gardeners can achieve.

Last year, more than 285,000 visitors strolled the 10 acres. Some come for ideas to incorporate into their own plantings, some are professional gardeners competing for prizes, but most come to "ooh and awe."

Held in the Philadelphia Convention Vistors Bureau, the massive plantings are erected for display from March 7 to 14.

It's difficult to believe that the mature shrubbery, towering trees, and houses have only been erected for indoor viewing the week before opening. A video showing how cranes, tow motors, and the latest technology are used to erect the display plays continuously in the members' louge.

Garden art using sculpture, architecture, waterfalls, and streams enhance the visual appeal.

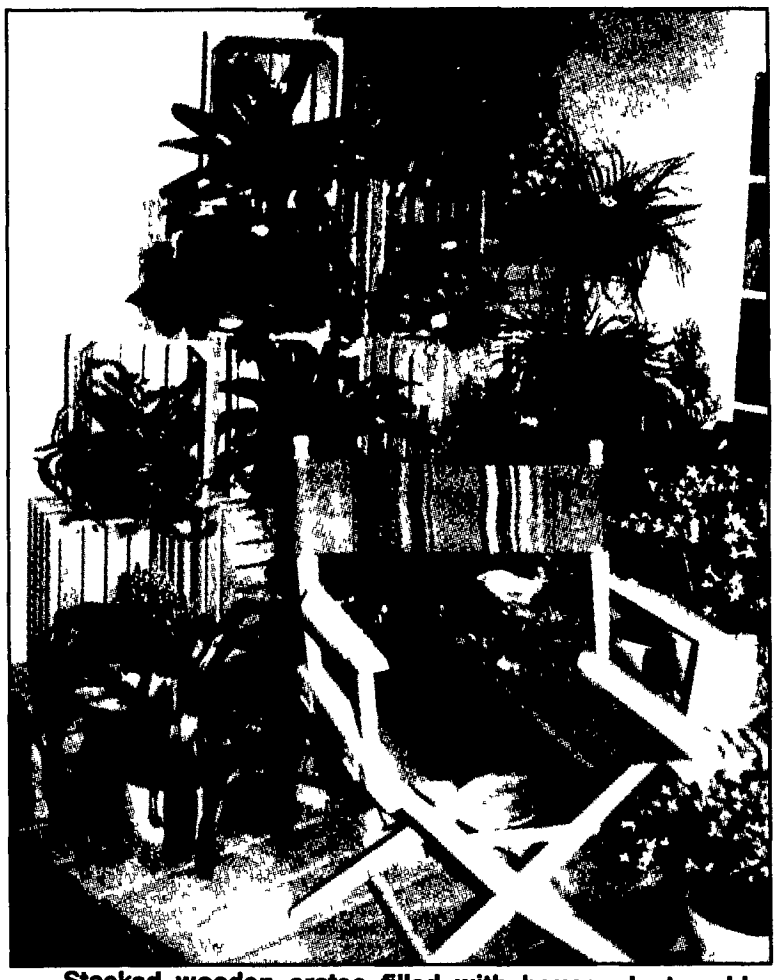
In addition to landscaping designs, the most talented designers in the country compete with floral designs, table settings, container displays, and even jewelry, miniature settings, and needlecrafts.

Free demonstrations and lectures are held every day on topics related to gardening, flowering arranging, plant care, and culinary cooking.

Landscape designers are on hand to answer questions.

The marketplace is filled with 125 vendors selling plants, flowers, and every imaginable product related to gardening.

The Philadelphia Flower Show continues to be open today, from 8 a.m. to 9:30 p.m. and tomorrow, from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Located at the Pennsylvania Convention Center at 12th and Arch Streets, admission is $18 for adults and $8 for children 2-12 years.

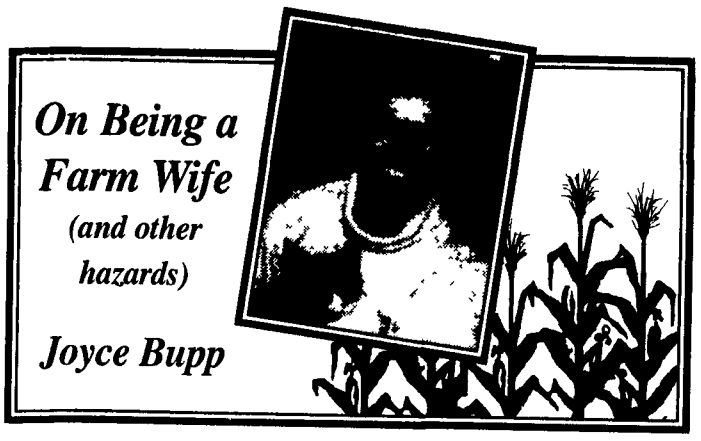


Stacked wooden crates filled with house plants add atmosphere to patio entertaining.

In competition for needlecraft depicting a historical site incorporating a garden, Miriam Rohrer, Lancaster, took second place with this hooked rug replica of the Hans Herr House.

Ideas for problem areas include planting clematis to climb a telephone pole, growing an ornamental tree and flowers in an old tub, and surrounding an old metal lawn chair with flowering beauty.

The women formed of wire and moss is one example of art and the American garden prevalent throughout the displays.



It was totally predictable.

After a relatively warm winter, with little moisture, crocus already in bloom, a few dandelions bravely showing their cheery little faces, it was totally predictable that snow would sneak in behind our unsuspecting backs.

Or maybe that the snow came "Marching" in might be a better way to put it, according to the calendar. And not just snow, but a veritable blizzard there for a bit. Apparently.

I didn't see the blizzard burst occur, just stumbled into the residue on my way home from an overnight dairy meeting last week. Though it was already dark outside, the realization there was a ribbon of white along the edge of the road so close to home was startling. Snapped out of my mental meanderings, I noticed the white wasn't just a dusting, but a couple-inches of accumulations. Closer scrutiny of the landscape even showed piles of plowed snow edging a church parking lot off the highway.

Gee whiz, my poor crocus would be history by now, nothing but a mushy, fading residue of yellow and purple blossoms. Buried under that surprise couple-inches of fluffy white stuff.

That it had been a blowing storm wasn't hard to decipher. Within a mile from our front door, this normally uneventful drive home suddenly turned a shade hairy, as bare, dry roadway gave way to broad patches of crusty snow streaked with ragged, semi-frozen, tire ruts. The sudden, unexpected lack of traction left me with a catch in my throat and a lighter foot on the brake of my trusty little car.

That the snow had "stuck" was also evident. The north side of every maple in front of the house was plastered with it, a stark contrast of white against black. Clumps of snow hung in the evergreen shrubs and our ancient spruce in the backyard.

With the car safely slid (sort of) into our garage, I grabbed an armful of traveling stuff, only to promptly take two steps into a pile of loose snow just outside the door. Snow which promptly sifted around the low sides of my dress flats. And the rest of the short walk to the house was treacherous with ragged ice patches and frozen, trampled paths.

Welcome home, I grimaced.

One thing about surprise March snows. They don't generally hang around very long. So, next morning, the moment barn chores were finished, I snapped on my skis for a quick tour out over the fields.

A tracing of cat tracks crisscrossed the backyard, ending at the edge of the first field behind the house. Only a few dozen yards away, my path crossed a similar, but larger, pawprints. A local fox had been on the prowl, probably headed for the bunker silos on the hill to hunt for mice. And maybe after having first checked for rodents around the stash of round bales at the bottom of the hill.

The narrow, double ribbon of indented tracks trailing in my path paralleled the fox's for awhile. Soon, it crossed another set of deeper and differently-shaped prints. Our resident while-tailed doe had likely also been out and about following the swift, sudden snow squalls, maybe nibbling at hay or corn kernels from the silage storage.

Residue from last year's crops poked up through the more shallow patches of snow, while the skis sank deeply into more sheltered places where it had settled from the wind. Texturing the blanket of white were endless wave-like etchings, each tiny wavecrest of snow a blue-hued shadow backlit by the bright morning sun. Its glow sparkled and dazzled atop the new snow cover and set to shimmering like diamonds the numerous bits of glittery ice scattered about. Absolutely breathtaking.

Welcome home, I grinned.

With pressing deadlines and phones to answer, I reluctantly glided back to the house and parked the skis on the porch. And, inside, noticed the pack of radish seed optimistically fished out of cold storage on a balmy, spring-like afternoon just days before.

Both will stay right where they are for the moment. 'Cause then we'll be ready.

Safe Drinking Water Clinic Is Planned

LEBANON (Lebanon Co.) — The quality and quantity of safe drinking water is always a concern among the general public. People with private water systems (wells, springs, cisterns etc.) are especially concerned because, unlike public water supply customers, they must manage their own water system. Furthermore, water quality and quantity problems often appear in private water systems during times of severe drought. Decisions about water testing, water system construction and water treatment are often difficult and expensive. Educational programs are needed to allow private water system owners to make informed decisions to provide safe, reliable drinking water at a reasonable cost.

A "Safe Drinking Water Clinic" program targeted at private water system owners/managers will be broadcast from Penn State via the Ag-Sat network on Wednesday, May 12, from 7:00 to 9:00 p.m. at the Lebanon Valley Ag Center, 2120 Cornwall Road, Lebanon.

The program will be presented by Bill Sharpe and Bryan Swistock and will include information on drinking water standards, frequent water quality problems in rural Pennsylvania, impacts of changing land-use on water resources, water testing, water system maintenance, water well location, water conservation, water treatment options and alternatives to treatment.

A new 20-minute video on proper well construction in Pennsylvania will also be shown.

The program will end with a question and answer session. Toll-free phone lines will be available for attendees in the counties to call Bill and Bryan at University Park.

Finfish have traditionally been a food that is eaten during the Lenten season. More recently, fish have been recognized as a nutritious food to eat weekly because they have a good source of protein and are generally low in fat, calories and sodium.

Fish also contains polyunsaturated fats made up of omega-3 fatty acids. Research suggests that these omega-3 fatty acids may offer some protection against heart disease and certain disorders of the immune system such as arthritis.

The following are some common fish that range from the best to fair sources of omega-3 and total polyunsaturated fat:

• EXCELLENT (two grams per 100 grams) — Atlantic mackerel, spiny dogfish, herring, Atlantic salmon, Chinook (King) salmon, lake trout, lake whitefish.

• GOOD (one to two grams per 100 grams) — Cod, flounder, red hake, Pacific halibut, ocean perch, pollock, red snapper, whiting.

• FAIR (less than one gram per 100 grams) — Cod, flounder, red hake, Pacific halibut, ocean perch, pollock, red snapper, whiting.

One new popular fish found in the seafood case is tilapia. Tilapia has been farm-raised and enjoyed in other parts of the world for centuries. Its origins can be traced back to the Nile River. Early records show that tilapia was eaten by Egyptian Pharaohs some 4,500 years ago.

Tilapia is reputed to be the fish that Jesus fed to the multitude in the Biblical story. It is also supposedly the fish that St. Peter caught when tested by Jesus. It is often called "St. Peter's fish." Although you may see it advertised this way, the name is not sanctioned by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration as a legal name.

Once seen mostly in white tablecloth restaurants, it is now widely available in the seafood section of supermarkets nationwide. The national consumer magazine "Simply Seafood" reported that tilapia was the new fish most frequently tried by its readers.

Because tilapia is new to seafood counters, consumers are asking questions like: Where is harvested? What does it taste like? How do I cook it?

Much of tilapia sold in this country today is raised in ponds or tanks in Latin America, Asia and the United States. Tilapia, a tropical fish, can thrive in either fresh or brackish water, but water temperatures must be higher than 55 F for it to survive.

The meat is white and firm, and the tender flakes have a sweet, mild flavor. You can use tilapia in recipes calling for snapper, flounder, catfish or other white-fleshed fish.

Like farm-raised catfish, tilapia's milk flavor is enhanced by herbs and other seasonings. It also accepts sauces well. Tilapia is versatile. You can broil, sauté, grill, bake, steam, fry, microwave or poach it.

Low in fat, a 3-1/2 ounce serving of tilapia fewer than 100 calories and more than 18 grams of protein. It is low in sodium. Remember though, these numbers are affected by cooking methods.

Fish Creole

1/4 teaspoon parsley, dried
1 small bay leaf
1/2 teaspoon salt (optional)

In a large skillet heat oil and add onion and green pepper. Sauté until tender. Add tomatoes, lemon juice, parsley, bay leaf, hot pepper sauce, and salt. Cover and allow to simmer for 15 minutes. The April IRS Clock Is Ticking

Tax time is just around the corner for consumers. Many people have already filed their taxes and are waiting for refunds, but if you haven't done yours yet, be sure to review some of the deductions and rules that may help you this year.

First of all, the 1998 tax year introduced a "Child Tax Credit." This is in addition to the normal exemptions that taxpayers claim for each of their children. This maximum $400 deduction applies to each child under the age of 17. Be sure to complete the appropriate form to claim this credit.

There are two important programs available for families in the lower tax brackets. You may be eligible for deductions and refunds, but they don't come automatically (even if your return indicates that your income level qualifies you.) You must fill out special forms.

Workers who were raising one child in their home and had family income of less than $26,473 in 1998 can get an "earned income credit" of up to $2,271. The income and credit levels is larger for families with more children. There is a smaller benefit for workers not raising children, but only those people earning less than $10,030 would qualify. To get this credit, you must file a "Schedule EIC."

You may get a refund even if you don't owe federal income tax, even if you are not required to file a tax return, but to get the refund, you must file the specified schedule.

Families in lower tax brackets may also qualify for Pennsylvania's "Tax Forgiveness Program." If you are a single parent with two children and your income in 1998 is $19,000, you will have $532 in state income taxes taken out of your paychecks. You can get all of this money back through the forgiveness program when you file your state tax return. The income levels increase to $30,900 for a married couple with three children offering forgiveness of $865.20.

These programs were created to support families who were transitioning from welfare back to the full-time workforce, but other families may qualify.

The whole tax filing process seems to change every year. Each year my husband and I think we have a handle on how much withholding we need, and we always seem to miss the mark because our family needs and incomes change all the time. That may be the way it is for you too, and filing your taxes may become overwhelming.

Across the state there are volunteer centers established to help people who want some support as they fill out all these forms and claim all these deductions.

And if you thrive on being a last minute filer and don't have the forms you need, the Internet may be an important resource to you this year. Normally people can pick up necessary schedules and forms at public libraries and post offices, senior citizen centers, and IRS offices, but they re also available electronically Penn State's library system is one site that you can check if you need to access forms from your home computer Their address is <www libraries psu edu/crsweb/docs/taxforms htm>

If you do get a refund this year, do yourself a favor – don't go on a shopping spree Instead, make a long-term investment with the money Pay down a credit card balance, pay extra on your car or student loan, or put a few extra bucks in your savings account

Featured Recipe

Couscous may be new to you, but it originated during ancient times in Morocco and is a staple in the Middle East and in Northern Africa.

People often think couscous is a grain like rice, but it's actually a form of pasta. Like macaroni and spaghetti, couscous is made from semolina, a product made from the tissue that sourounds the developing seed of durum wheat. Semolina is mixed with water to form tiny granules of pasta, which is then cooked with steam and dried.

Couscous is often a substitute for rice. With about 90 calories per half-cup serving, its slightly less caloric than white or brown rice, but it carries slightly more protein at 3 grams per serving compared with rice's 2 to 2.5 grams.

Brown rice has more fiber than either white rice or couscous, but again, the difference isn't that great—a half-cup of couscous has one gram fiber, compared with less than a half-gram in white rice and almost 2 grams in brown rice.

The appeal of couscous is that it offers variety from traditional forms of pasta and grains. It's quick and easy to prepare in as little as five minutes.

Try this recipe for a light, satisfying main dish.

BOMBAY SALAD

5.8-ounce package roasted garlic and olive oil couscous mix
⅓ cup apricot jam
¼ cup freshly squeezed lime juice
2 teaspoons curry powder
3-4 boneless, skinless chicken breast halves
Salt and pepper to taste
3 to 4 cups cut-up fruit (grapes, peaches, pineapple)
⅓ cup slivered almonds, toasted

Prepare couscous according to package directions using olive oil. Fluff with fork; cool in a large bowl.

In a small bowl, combine apricot jam, lime juice, and curry powder; stir well. Set aside 3 tablespoons sauce for coating chicken.

Season chicken with salt and pepper. Coat with 2 tablespoons sauce. Grill over medium-hot coals 10 to 14 minutes or until chicken is no longer pink inside. Halfway through, turn and coat with remaining 1 tablespoon sauce. Discard and remaining sauce used for chicken.

Lightly toss couscous with 2 cups fruit, remaining sauce, and all but 1 tablespoon almonds; spoon onto platter.

Slice chicken crosswise and arrange with remaining fruit around couscous. Sprinkle with remaining 1 tablespoon almonds.

Choose Water First

Do you realize the health benefits of drinking water? Most Americans grow up drinking just about anything but water. We have a list of favorite beverages starting with soda, to coffee and tea, juice and fruit flavored drinks. Water is usually used for washing down pills, bathing and brushing our teeth. But water is vital for proper functioning of the body. It can quickly become the beverage of choice.

Water makes up 92 percent of our blood plasma, 80 percent of our muscle mass, 60 percent of our red blood cells and 50 percent of everything else in our bodies. What an important ingredient to good health!

Water is as essential a nutrient as the other five: carbohydrates, proteins, fats, vitamins and minerals. A human can survive many days, even months without food. But the human body can survive only three to five days without water.

Water has many functions. It is the vehicle the body must use to flush out the waste produced in normal body functions. In weight loss, the body requires even more water to carry out the breakdown waste from fat. Adequate water also prevents the buildup of uric acid within the body, which in excess, leads to gouty arthritis.

Water is the only liquid you consume that doesn't require the body to work to metabolize or excrete it. The body has to work overtime to process and excrete the colorings and chemicals in sodas. Many other beverages, although fluid based actually remove more water than contained in the beverage itself. Many beverages such as tea, coffee and soda, contain tannic acid, a waste product that interferes with iron absorption and competes for excretion with the other bodily waste products such as uric acid. Even juices do not provide the solid benefits of pure, wonderful water, since they require the body to work to process the substances they contain.

Why is water considered to have miraculous results? Water is essential for maintaining proper fluid balance. As you avoid excess salt, take in adequate protein and increase your water intake, your kidney function will increase.

Water is essential for maintaining muscle tone, allowing muscles to contract naturally, which prevents dehydration. Water also works to keep the skin healthy and resilient.

How much water do you need? Eight to ten glasses a day is the standard answer. As you begin to drink this amount, your natural thirst for it will increase. As you learn what water does for your body, your motivation for drinking it will grow.

Some of us find that a glass of clear, cool water before we start to eat, can slow down our fast paced life. May of us are more than fast food eaters, we are fast eaters. You will do much better drinking water right after your meal, while the food is present, neutralizing the acids. Refrigerating water for 24 hours will cause the chlorine to dissipate; or add a slice of lemon or lime to improve the taste appeal of "just water."

Bad Pruning Leads To Ugly Plants

UNIVERSITY PARK (Centre Co.) — A haphazard pruning job can be as unsightly as a bad haircut, except the plant can't wear a hat to hide the damage.

Robert Nuss, professor of ornamental horticulture in Penn State's College of Agricultural Sciences, offers some tips on what not to do when you pick up your pruning shears.

• Never leave short stubs. Twigs should be cut close to the main stem. "Stubs do not heal quickly and make an ideal opening for disease and insects," Nuss said. "Try to get the blade of the tool as close to the main stem as possible."

• Never prune spring-flowering plants before they blossom. The flower buds are formed the season before, and pruning will remove them before they can open.

• Never cut all shoots or stems to the same height. It gives the plant a "crew cut" look and stimulates dense growth on the top of the plant.

• Never shear hedges so they are narrow at the bottom. The bottom should be several inches wider than the top to allow for fuller growth. The wider bottom exposses more of the plant to light and eliminates the twiggy look many hedges have.

• Never leave a stump without a bud at the end to continue growth. Slant the cut slightly so a tiny portion of the twig remains above the bud.

Water Testing For Lebanon Countians

The following tests are available:

• Bacteria, $12.

• Bacteria, Nitrate, pH, and Total Dissolved Solids, $37

Penn State recommends testing for bacteria annually and other tests every three years

Don't Store Appliances In Unheated Locations

It is not recommended storing a manual defrost freezer in any location where the temperature will get colder than 32 degrees. If the freezer is located in a temperature colder than 32 degrees, the coil in the compressor may become stiff, prohibiting the compressor from turning on.

Putting the freezer in a location where it gets colder could leave you with a void warranty. For an automatic defrost freezer, the unit should not be stored in a location that drops below 60 degrees.

Farm Safety Day Is Fun And Educational For Whole Family

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

LAMPETER (Lancaster Co.) — The farm is a great place to play and learn. If you are like most children growing up on the farm, you help with farm chores at an early age.

But the farm is also a dangerous place.

Children fall through haylofts. They can fall off hay wagons, get caught in machinery, and suffocate in grain bins.

Each year, children die and are seriously injured on the farm. In fact, farm injuries are the number one killer and disabler of children in the county.

To help children learn to play and work safely on the farm, a Farm Family Safety Day is held each year at a different location in Lancaster County. This year, the event will be Saturday, April 10, from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. at the Lampeter Fairgrounds.

Last year about 200 children

Climbing an elevator may look like fun, but what are the dangers? Kids can find out when they attend the Farm Safety Camp.

Last year, more than 200 children attended the Farm Safety Camp. Everything is free, including food, activities, lunch, and take-home materials. Register now to attend this year's event at the Lampeter Fairgrounds. No registrations will be accepted after March 25.

attended Farm Safety Day. Any child or family living or working on a farm can participate.

The free farm safety demonstrations are for the entire family, but children ages 8 through 13 can participate in special events. Activities for children under 8 years will be provided, but these children must be accompanied by a parent or legal guardian.

"It's great when you see so many kids having a great time while learning some new safety practices," said Sharie Keyser-Groff, county director for Safe Kids.

Free food and refreshments will also be provided to all registered participants. Limited transportation, if needed, is also available.

To register, send your name, your parents' name, address, and age. Include your phone number and the work phone number of your parent or guardian, your family physcian, and any special medical needs or conditions.

Mail registration to Southern States Co-op, Inc. 1609 River Road, Marietta, PA 17547. You will receive a confirmation if you are properly registered for this event.

Dairy Of Distinction Program Again Seeks Nice Looking Farms

STATE COLLEGE (Centre Co.) - Do you take pride in maintaining your dairy farm? Does your dairy farm project an attractive, wholesome image to consumers? If so, the Dairy of Distinction Program of Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey, will consider your farm for the program's annual recognition awards.

The Northeast Dairy Farm Beautification Program that oversees the Distinction program was first started in 1983 in Pennsylvania to recognize the hard work and dedication of the farmers who maintain attractive farms. The purpose of the program is to instill a greater sense of confidence in the wholesomeness of dairy products, and increase their sales.

Farms that apply are judged on the roadside appearance of buildings, grounds, and surroundings, since this is what our dairy product consumers observe as they drive by the farm.

The cleanliness of the barnyard, feed areas, and manure management are all areas taken into consideration when a team of judges takes a look at your farm from a roadside point of view. Judging is conducted during the month of May. Award winners are announced during your local June Dairy Month activities.

To qualify for consideration, you must be actively dairy farming and shipping milk.

Applications are available for Pennsylvania dairy farms from Michael O'Conner, 324 Henning Building, Dept. of Dairy and Animal Science, Penn State University, University Park, PA 16802. Phone: (814) 863-3913.

For New York State applications are available from Carol Keene, RD 1, Box 31, Gilbertsville, NY 13776. Phone: (607) 783-2169.

For New Jersey applications, send to: August Knispel, 641 Sidney Road, Pittstown, NJ 08867. Phone: (908) 735-4989.

For Vermont applications, send to: Elisa Clancy, Vermont Department of Agriculture, 16 State St., Drawer 20, Montpelier, VT 05620-2901. Phone: (802) 828-3835.

All applications must be completed and returned to your respective state secretary by April 15, 1999.

The Dairy of Distinction program is financed in Pennsylvania by Dairy Farmers through the American Dairy Association Dairy Council and Pennsylvania Dairy Promotion Program in cooperation with many local agribusiness organizations. The program is conducted with advice and help from Penn State Cooperative Extensi.on.

Dairy of Distinction

HOW IS YOUR FARM SCORED?

Northeast Dairy Farm Beautification Program, Inc.

Awards will be based upon neatness, good maintenance and other factors which can be controlled by the farmer. Attractive background scenery should not be weighed heavily in judging. All judging observations should be made from a vehicle at one or more points on an adjacent public highway (or if farm is off the road, the nearest lane) Judging should give equal consideration to old wood construction and new construction of metal or concrete block.

The award program may be used for subsequent advertising or promotion activities for dairy products or dairy farming Farmers who apply for awards agree that, if selected they will cooperate with these activities and make all reasonable efforts to maintain both the exterior and interior of their properties in an acceptable condition

HOW THE APPLICATION WORKS

The owner or operator of the dairy farm should sign the application and send it to NEDFBP secretary by April 15

HOW THE JUDGING WORKS

Judging teams will visit farms during the month of May Farms will be judged each year as the award is presented on an annual basis Any dairy failing to maintain appearance standards will be asked to remove their sign The Dairy of Distinction signs remain the property of the committee, not the property of the dairy farmer All farms must achieve a compliance score of 90 percent on their Dairy of Distinction score card Your cooperative or milk handler will be contacted to approve your milk quality.

With 3-year-old granddaughter Natalie, Dr. Albert Price, founder, and Shari Keyser-Groff, director and mother of 9-month-old Max, review plans for the annual Safe Kids Farm Family Safety Day April 10. Because the farm is the most dangerous workplace in America, the event is held to provide information and hands-on experience to help families reinforce the great need to keep themselves safe.

SafeKids Plan Farm Safety Program

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

LAMPETER (Lancaster Co.) — Every year kids are injured or killed on the farm.

As a pediatrician, Dr. Albert Price has observed the agony families suffer when children are permanently hurt or die from farm injuries.

Usually only a small article appears in the daily paper, and for the most part, life goes on as before for readers who think "this will never happen to me."

"But it can," said Shari Keyser-Groff. "Accidents happen so quickly. They can happen in a blink of an eye to anyone."

As a mother and as a professional, Shari wants to do everything she can to prevent farm injuries. For this reason she, with the help of Dr. Price, directs the SafeKids program in Lancaster County.

For the fifth year, SafeKids will hold a Farm Family Safety Day. This year the event will be held on Saturday, April 10, at the Lampeter Fairgrounds from 8 a.m. until 2 p.m.

Research shows that 90 percent of injuries are preventable. If a child is hurt or killed unintentionally, parents often suffer intense guilt and shame. Sometimes parents are unaware of the dangers associated with farm life.

"We don't want to interfere with the lifestyles of farm families. We are aware that children are part of the work force on the farm and their participation is of economical value," Price said.

But he does want parents to be aware of dangers and how to avoid them. "We are not telling families how to run their farms. We are giving them information on how to keep the farm safe."

During Farm Family Safety Day, children and parents learn the same things. They learn what age group is developmentally appropriate for the task. They are taught how to deal with emergency situations on the farm, and how to properly store chemicals.

Hay loft injuries are a common occurance for both children and adults, Price said. For this reason, speakers at the Farm Safety Day have devised plans to cover hay holes when not in use.

Despite farm safety being a fairly sobering subject, the event is planned to make it fun for all participants. Prizes are awarded. Puppet shows are held for younger children. Lunch and refreshments are provided free.

The program relies upon donations from agri-related businesses and volunteers who help with the program.

When Price first formed the Farm Safety program, he was told that Amish and Mennonite families would not participate; however, he is pleased to report that about 50 percent of the 200 children and 100 adults attending last year's Farm Safety Camp were from Amish and Mennonite families.

Many of the Amish schools are also incorporating farm safety materials into the class curriculum.

At the Farm Safety Day, reflective tape that is 10 times more reflective than that commonly used will be distributed. The tape doesn't glow during daylight hours. It can be installed on shaft sides of horse carts, wagons, and bike spokes.

The Society of Farm Women of Lancaster County prepare and serve lunch with food that has been donated by several supermarkets.

Shari has worked with the SafeKids program for 2½ years. She and her husband have a 9-month old son who was born with heart disease. For this reason, she has spent many days at at the Hershey Medical Center and has seen children brought in with accidental injuries.

"I saw a three-year-old who lost his leg from a lawn mower accident. Incidents like these have given me more passion for SafeKids than ever," Shari said. "We must do whatever we can to make the world a safer place for children."

Both Shari and Dr. Price are pleased that pre- and post-testing reveals a tremendous improvement in farm safety precautions.

SafeKids also holds a Safe Kids Fair on Sunday, May 2, from noon to 4 p.m.

To register for the Farm Family Safety Day on April 10, send child's and parents' names, address, and age of child. Include home phone number and the work phone number of parent or guardian, name of family physcian, and any special medical needs or conditions of child.

Mail registration to Southern States Co-op, Inc. 1609 River Road, Marietta, PA 17547. You will receive a confirmation if you are properly registered for this event.

The deadline for registration is March 25. No late or phone registration is accepted, but if you have questions, you can call (717) 426-1961 or 1-800-822-0769.

Experiment With Bread Baking

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Michael Jabinski grew up helping his grandmother bake bread. He went on to become a nuclear engineer, but never stopped baking bread.

Now, retired, he travels the country as a spokesperson for King Arthur Flour and teaches others the process of bread baking.

Jabinski's casual, easy-going attitude toward bread baking puts even the novice at ease.

"Just throw leftover potatoes or cooked rice into the dough," Jubinsky said of ingredients to make a moist, tasty bread. "It's not important to be absolutely exact. My grandmother did this and never had a loaf that failed."

Simple?

Well, not quite that simple. Jubinski recently taught workshops in the Lancaster area.

The one thing a bread baker does need to be exact about is yeast measurement. But Jubinski said that too many people have yeast anxiety.

"Relax," he said. "Yeast needs warmth, moisture, and food (sugar) to make a sponge."

It's important to know that temperatures greater than 138 degrees kill yeast. Dissolving yeast in liquid that is 95 degrees is just right, but you don't need a thermometer to test the water.

"If it feels comfortable to your finger, it's right for the yeast," Jabinski said.

If you use milk in place of water, scald the milk to kill the lactose enzyme to prevent a gummy dough and kill any funky flavors. The scalded milk must be cooled to lukewarm (which requires 20 minutes) before adding the yeast, but if you are impatient, add the butter to the milk to make it cool faster.

Jabinsky said that, on average, dough made in Lancaster County's climate needs about three tablespoons more flour than that made in other areas of the country.

Jabinski used one dough that he formed into three different shapes and added different seasonings to make Swedish Almond Bread, German Coffee Stollen, and a six-braided Poppy Bread.

"None of these are difficult, but built on simple techniques," Jabinski assured the audience.

He demonstrated bread baking by hand and by bread machine, which he dubbed the "Dump-and-Go-School" of bread baking.

Here are some hints Jabinski shared during the bread baking session:

Dough is the right consistency when it comes cleanly away from the sides of the bowl or bread machine. You can open the bread machine lid to check on the dough at any time. If dough is too dry, add more liquid; if too wet, add more flour, but add only a tablespoonful at a time until it reaches the right consistency.

• Salt-free bread is very flat tasting. Salt is added to dough for flavor and to retard yeast growth.

• Beat eggs before adding to liquid or you will have streaks in the dough.

• When measuring flour, never dip into flour with a cup and sweep off excess or you'll have 25 percent more flour than a cup should measure. This will result in a dry, heavy bread. Fluff flour before measuring and fill cup using a spoon. Don't tap or shake cup after filling with flour.

• If the weather is humid, more flour is needed. In the winter, the air is dry and the dough doesn't absorb as much flour. But these adjustments should be made by adding or reducing flour one tablespoon at a time.

• Kneading develops elasticity. Flour hands and dust dough but don't cover with flour. Fold dough in half, with the heels of your hands push dough down and away. Repeat. Dough needs only to be kneaded about 5 minutes until smooth and elastic or until dough no longer needs to be dusted with flour to prevent it sticking on your hands and board. Dough should bounce back when poked.

• Spread oil over bowl to keep dough soft when rising. Cover with plastic wrap. If the room temperature is cool and you need a sweater, the dough will too. Cover with a cloth.

• Let dough rise until doubled in bulk. Poke dough with finger. If it bounces back, it needs to rise longer. It is finished rising if it doesn't bounce back.

• Poke down dough to break up large bubbles that may have formed when rising.

• Before putting dough in oven, brush with egg wash made with egg yolk and one tablespoon water.

• Bake stollen on cookie sheet covered with parchment paper to save oiling the pan and cleaning it.

• Increase shelf life of flour by placing a bay leaf in flour to keep out bugs. The bay leaf does not flavor the flour.

• Whole grain flour will become rancid at room temperature. Always keep whole grains refrigerated or in the freezer. Take out of the freezer the night before using and return any unused flour to the freezer.

• People often ask why the same recipe will yield a perfect loaf one time but not the next. One of the reasons is that flour even under the same brand name varies from time to time. Most companies add bromate (chemicals to standarize the flour), which is illegal in some countries.

King Arthur is milled from high protein hard red winter wheat. It is never bromated and tested to assure that it never varies more than .2 percent in protein.

King Arthur flour is available by mail order and at some supermarkets. If you would like to receive "The Baker's Catalogue," write to P.O. Box 876, Norwich, VT 05055-0876.

Here is the master recipe Jabinski used to form into three different shapes to make Swedish Almond Bread, German Coffee Stollen, and a six-braided Poppy Bread.

Poppy Stollen may look difficult to duplicate, but Michael Jabinski, King Arthur spokesperson, said that it is built on simple techniques that any baker can conquer.

MASTER RECIPE FOR HOLIDAY SWEET BREAD

Makes 2 loaves:

½ cup warm water (95 degrees)
1 teaspoon sugar
½ cup King Arthur unbleached all-purpose flour
1 cup milk, scalded
¼ cup butter
1 teaspoon butter
1 teaspoon salt
½ cup sugar
2 teaspoons vanilla
2 eggs, lightly beaten
4½ -5½ cups King Arthur unbleached all-purpose flour
Egg wash: 1 egg yolk, beaten with 1 tablespoon flour

In a small bowl or 2-cup measure, combine yeast, warm water, 1 teaspoon sugar, and ½ cup flour. Cover with plastic wrap and a clean towel and set aside until bubbly and very active, about 10 to 15 minutes.

Meanwhile, scald the milk. Pour immediately into a large bowl and add the butter, sugar, salt, vanilla, and beaten eggs. Stir to melt the butter. When the mixture is lukewarm, add the yeast mixture and mix together.

Add flour, one cup at a time, until the dough comes cleanly away from the sides of the bowl. Turn the dough out onto a lighlty floured surface and scrape out the bowl. Lightly oil the bowl and set aside.

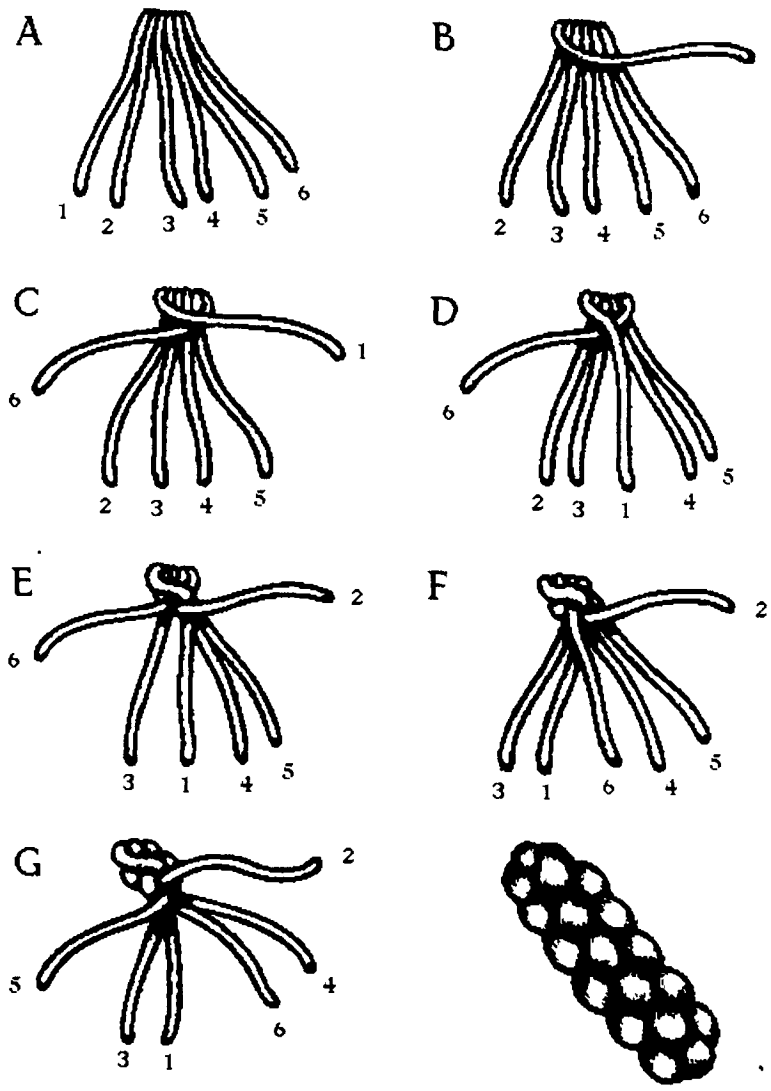
Knead the dough, using only enough flour to keep the dough from sticking to your hands and the board. The dough should be soft and pliable, but not sticky. (The secret to a soft, tender bread is a soft dough).

Place dough into the oiled bowl, turn to oil all surfaces, and cover with plastic wrap and a clean towel. Let sit in warm place for about 45 minutes or until doubled.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Punch down and round into a ball. Divide in half, cover with plastic wrap and let rest 10 to 15 minutes. Form into desired shapes, such as the Swedish Almond Braid, Poppy Stollen or Six-Stranded Braid.

Six-Stranded Braid: Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Place on a greased baking sheet, cover with plastic wrap and a clean towel, and let rise in a warm place for 30 minutes, or until doubled.

Brust the top of the braid with the egg wash. Bake at 375 degrees for 25 to 30 minutes or until done. Remove from pan and cool on wire racks.



Six-Stranded Braid is attractive enough to use as a table centerpiece.

Poppy Stollen: Roll dough into rectangle, about ¼ -inch thick. Spread with poppy-seed filling, leaving 1-inch of clear space on all sides. Starting at a long side, roll up jell-roll style. Pinch ends and tuck under.

Starting 1-inch from end, slice down and completely through the rolled dough lengthwise. Turn the two resulting strands so that the filling faces up, and cross them over each other two to three times. Cover with plastic wrap and a clean towel, and let rise in a warm place until doubled in bulk.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Brush tops of loaves with an egg beaten with 1 tablespoon water. Bake loaves for 30 to 40 minutes, or until a rich golden brown. Cool on wire racks.

Swedish Almond Braid or Mock Braid:

Roll dough into rectangle or oval shape about ¼ -inch thick. Mark dough with two light vertical lines to divide dough into three equal sections. Spread filling in center, leaving 1-inch of clear space at either end. Cut 1-inch-wide strips from edge of filling to outer edge of dough. Do not use jellies and jams thickened with pectin or they will run out and burn. Cut one-inch wide strips from edge of filling to outer edge of dough. Fold ends over and bring dough strips across the filling on a diagonal, alternating from side to side, like a two-stranded braid.

Cover dough with plastic wrap and clean towel, and let rise in warm place until doubled in bulk.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. Bush tops of loaves with an egg beaten with 1 tablespoon water. Bake loaves 25 to 35 minutes or until a rich golden brown. Cool on wire racks.

Drizzle with thick confectioners' sugar icing if desired and top with sliced almonds.

Poultry Progress Day Tackles Industry Concerns

LOU ANN GOOD
Lancaster Farming Staff

LANCASTER (Lancaster Co.) — Poultry producers and agribusiness leaders had a new opportunity to use technology when they gathered together for the annual Poultry Day held at the Farm and Home Center last week.

Because of a blizzard in the Penn State area, three of the scheduled seminar speakers were unable to attend. However, video conference hook-up enabled the speakers to teach from Penn State while the audience viewed it on the screen. The speakers could also interact with the audience and answer questions that the audience posed.

The day-long program took an in-depth look at ways to solve problems confronting the poultry industry.

A national survey revealed that whole bird condemnation is higher in this area than in other states, especially during winter months. This is partially attributed to changeable winter weather that promotes infectious respiratory disease.

While broilers are grown under contract, the agreed upon payment can be reduced because of condemned birds. The average cost to a grower is a loss of $60 to $297 per flock. The average cost to the contractor is $1,020 to $1,680 because of product loss, processing loss, line slow down, reprocessing, and lower total value of product to market.

Dr. Michael Hulet of Penn State said that improved management can cut these losses. Most infectious outbreaks can be linked to biosecurity lapses and to not culling birds before full growth.

"Pick up dead birds immediately. Cull early and often so you don't have the added cost of feeding and caring for the birds that eventually need to be culled at the processing plant," Hulet said.

Dr. Dan Weinstock of Penn State said that the best argument for biosecurity is that it keeps out disease. But respiratory diseases also increase when the bird is under stress from improper air and water quality. Ammonia gas, dust, too cold or too hot temperatures, and rancid feed contribute to virus contraction.

Birds have an innate defense against disease: skin, mucous, and stomach organisms that work to block out diseases. When birds are immunized, it takes several days after vaccination for immunity protection. If a bird is sick before immunization, it is quite possible that the vaccination will be ineffective.

A decrease in performance and an increase in sick or dead birds are signs that birds are under stress. While laboratory examination can detect cause, it is almost always due to a reason.

"Always check for underlying dysfunction," Hulet said. "It is often caused by a bad environment. If the environment is uncomfortable to you, it is uncomfortable to the bird."

Ammonia is one of the culprits and is very costly to ignore. The problem will ammonia is that people who work around chickens all the day no longer detect it from smell.

Dr. Eileen Wheeler said that an increase in ammonia levels can result in poor feed conversion, low weight gain, disease, carcass condemnation, and blindness.

She oversaw a study in three barns using nine different flocks. Sensors were put in at bird level and hand-held ratings were taken to measure ammonia levels. The study showed that ammonia levels were higher at bird level than at the level a human would stand.

Another surprising founding of the study revealed that ammonia levels were often extremely high on day one, when the flock was brought into the house. These high levels are attributed to the fact that the chicken houses are often heated without proper ventilation in preparation for the flock.

"When you're trying to conserve fuel, it doesn't make economical sense to allow the heat to go through the exhaust system, but you must," Wheeler said.

Reused litter also raises ammonia levels considerably. Litter replacement is preferred. Although that raises labor costs, it can be offset somewhat by selling dry litter.

Ammonia measurement is cumbersome and expensive for producers, but it is necessary to raise healthy flocks.

Dr. Keith Honegger of Intervet shared the latest findings on field vaccination principles and on infectious bronchitis. He warned growers that chickens may not be properly vaccinated despite going through the process. Reasons depend on the vaccination method used. In drinking water vaccination, one of the biggest mistakes is not flushing the lines properly. Make sure the dye is coming in all lines for at least 30 seconds or until the water feels cold.

Spray vaccination may be deterred by worn out or improper nozzle tips. The finer the spray, the deeper it goes into a bird's respiratory system.

Cage vaccination is usually more effective than spraying because birds can't run from the spray.

"When spraying beyond six feet, you loose control," Honegger said. When spraying, dim lights, spray over the heads of the chickens, and work from the middle of the house to the ends.

Always use noncholorinated water. There is a big difference in how a virus responds to chlorine.

When observing wing web vaccination, Honegger was appalled to see how often it was done improperly. He estimates that 45 percent of the chickens were not properly vaccinated.

"Educate the crews on the importance of vaccinnation and proper procedures," Honegger said. One crew he observed allowed most of the vaccination to dribble on the feathers in order to better enable them to observe which birds had been vaccinated and which had not.

Feathers should be removed at the point of needle contact because feathers prevent the vaccine from penetrating the skin.

Some crews handled broilers by one leg, which should never be done.

Honegger reminded poultry farmers that viruses can stay in broiler houses for extended periods when the litter is not cleaned out.

"It is well documented that a virus can live a long time in the dust," he said.

While poultry farmers often clean out the chicken house, they often forget about the attic. Attic ventilation can send that dust through the poultry houses.

Dr. Dennis Buffington of Penn State talked about electric deregulation and how it effects poultry farmers. He said that selecting the right supplier saved a poultry grower $30,000 annually. But the best supplier for one grower may not be the best for next. It is important to shop around, but be wary of signing bonuses. He cited examples of some customers signing up to receive a free gift but never checking the price they would pay for the service.

"Anything you save goes to the bottom line," Buffington said.

Walt Peechatka, PennAg Industries Association, explained implications that Concentrated Animal Feeding Operation (CAFOs) will have on poultry farmers. He reviewed the methods used to calculate CAFOs definition of Concentrated Animal Operator (CAO) and the Animal Equipment Units (AEU) in determining the regulations that apply to different farming operations.

It is important to consider all livestock and not only poultry when computing the number of animals and the regulations that apply. It is estimated that Lancaster County has 495 concentrated animal operations, which is higher than any other county in the state.

Peechatka said that it is estimated that agriculture nationwide spends $20 billion annually complying to government regulations.

Farmers should check with extension services for help in determining how their individual operations will need to comply with the proposed CAFO regulations.

Paul Sauder, Sauder Eggs, spoke on food trends and the challenge the egg industry has in meeting demands of the changing egg markets.

The trend toward home replacement meals in which consumers purchase prepared foods to go instead of cooking the food at home continues to escalate.

To make eggs more convenient, Sauder offers hard boiled and red beet and pickled mustard eggs in jars, which have a four-week shelf life. They are developing a 30-second wrap using hard boiled eggs.

When the company first released colored Easter eggs, some people ridiculed the idea, but the company sold 1,400 cases of the colored eggs last year.

Consumers' number one concern is food safety. The Pennsylvania Egg Quality Assurance Program (PEQAP) assures stringent methods used to meet the highest standards of food safety. PEQAP is a voluntary program monitored by the PDA. It is being lauded as a model for other food industries to follow.

Egg packaging must change, Sauder believes, because a survey of egg cartons in the supermarket revealed that 45 percent of the cartons contained one cracked egg, 11 percent had two cracked eggs, and 6.1 percent contained at least one leaker.

To eliminate or reduce the possibility of eggs being cracked in the supermarket, eggs are being packaged in tamper-proof cartons so that customers can't open and kids can't poke eggs during supermarket visits.

"We don't want a label that warns of deadly bacterial printed on egg cartons," Sauder said of the need for the poultry industry to continue self-imposed regulations to continue to raise the quality of eggs.

While the egg industry has taken a severe rap in the past decade as being a high-cholesterol food that increases heart disease risk, Sauder sees the tide turning.

Recent media attention has shown there has never been scientific research to prove that eating eggs raised cholesterol levels. Although there is resistance from scientific journals to confirm this finding, there is evidence that egg consumption per capita is rising. Last year per capita consumption was at 245 eggs compared to 231 in 1991.

In the next four weeks, the egg industry will spend $135,000 on television promotion. Clips of the commercials were shown to the audience.

Poultry Day was sponsored by Penn State Cooperative Extension and the Lancaster County Poultry Association.

Over the years I've written about our three girls. Now it is time to write something about our three boys. Today I will start with our oldest son, Kenneth.

He was a shy five-year-old who started first grade. And, he did not have a good teacher so that his first few weeks were rough. We took him to Little League baseball and the first year he got an award for the "most improved." He liked sports, but the work on the dairy farm was considered to be the most important job.

He was in many 4-H Clubs including dairy, tractor and community. In all of these clubs he held offices and had five calf projects. He had an opportunity to visit 4-Hers in other states and was a delegate to American Institute of Cooperatives in Virginia. After graduating from Manheim Township High School he attended Delaware Valley College in Doylestown. He worked at several part time jobs while attending college. He worked for United Parcel Service, a dog kennel, and at a nursery transplanting trees. After he graduated with a degree in dairy husbandry, he got a job as manager of Farm Credit in five southeastern counties in Pennsylvania. Later he worked for Cargill as a salesman and was moved from Tennessee to North Carolina and back again.

At the present time, he is the manager of an egg processing plant in Virginia. There are 600,000 chickens at the plant and many more under contract. His plant has a franchise to sell organic eggs east of the Mississippi River.

He is married and has three children. Sometimes he can visit us on one of his many business trips in this area. He has come a long way from the pleasant little fellow who lived on the farm with us in the 1950s. Now he has many responsibilities but is still a "people person."

ANSWER — Marion Capp, Mechanicsburg, wanted to know how to keep squirrels and chipmunks away from bird feeders. She has tried all kinds of feeders with different size openings, plus squirrel-resistant feeders, baffles, and a reddish powder that the squirrels aren't supposed to tolerate the odor. She has tried giving squirrels their own food hoping they'd let the birds at the feeders, but nothing helps. She put a feeder in the middle of the clothes line, but the squirrels climb up from the bottom and run along the line. Thanks to Dan Albright, Souderton, who recommends getting white lithium grease at an auto parts store. Spray foam on rope near where squirrel exits tree and on pole to ground feeder. Squirrels that get their feet on this never bother feeders again.

AUCTION!

A Plethoric Assemblage
10 A.M. WEDNESDAY,
MARCH 17th, 1999
At The Ridge Fire Co. Along Rte. 23 Between Rte. 100 and PHOENIXVILLE, PA

Once upon a time we visited a man In fact, it was just last week We were astounded! Three floors of his humongous (ware)house stacked and packed to the gills with an astonishing variety of STUFF We followed him throughout on a dangerous path (sometimes we even had to walk sideways), surveying the immense, precarious piles The stuff, threatening to avalanche at any moment, defied description We need to make an accurate list for advertising, our buyer's expect it! He was hard to nail down, overwhelmed by his own situation, and claiming to have even bigger piles of even better stuff at other undisclosed locations, he could only say, "WHATEVER YOU WANT!" So we suggested, and he agreed to deliver van after van load of

ANTIQUES and COLLECTIBLES

Antique oak furniture, some to restore, antique gas chandeliers, we're promised maybe a hundred or so pieces of Roseville, Hull and McCoy pottery. Quite a bit of paper and ephemera to include 1,000? postcards, old Playboy magazines, cases of new and old comic books, indentures, a stack of hand colored Currier and Ives prints Old texts and testaments

Our client urged us to simply advertise 'COLLECTIBLES!', sure that our buyers would immediately imagine his overflowing bins of collectibles made to be collectible like Bob Mackie Barbies, Star Trek stuff, X-Men figures, Dick Tracy & other collectible series cards! Boxes of stuff by the van load!

Oh, and did we mention BEANIE BABIES?! Yep, half a van of those, and possible some baseball related stuff

She didn't gain distance until she unwittingly learned from underclassmen that enjoying herself is important.

As she began to enjoy herself, she saw an increase in momentum in track which surprised her. She continued to increase her distance only to lose the actual competition on a heartbreaking technicality.

"I was still successful," she said. "I owe it to the freshman girls who showed me how to have fun"

Doyle Paul is adviser to the Berlin-Brothersvalley FFA Chapter.

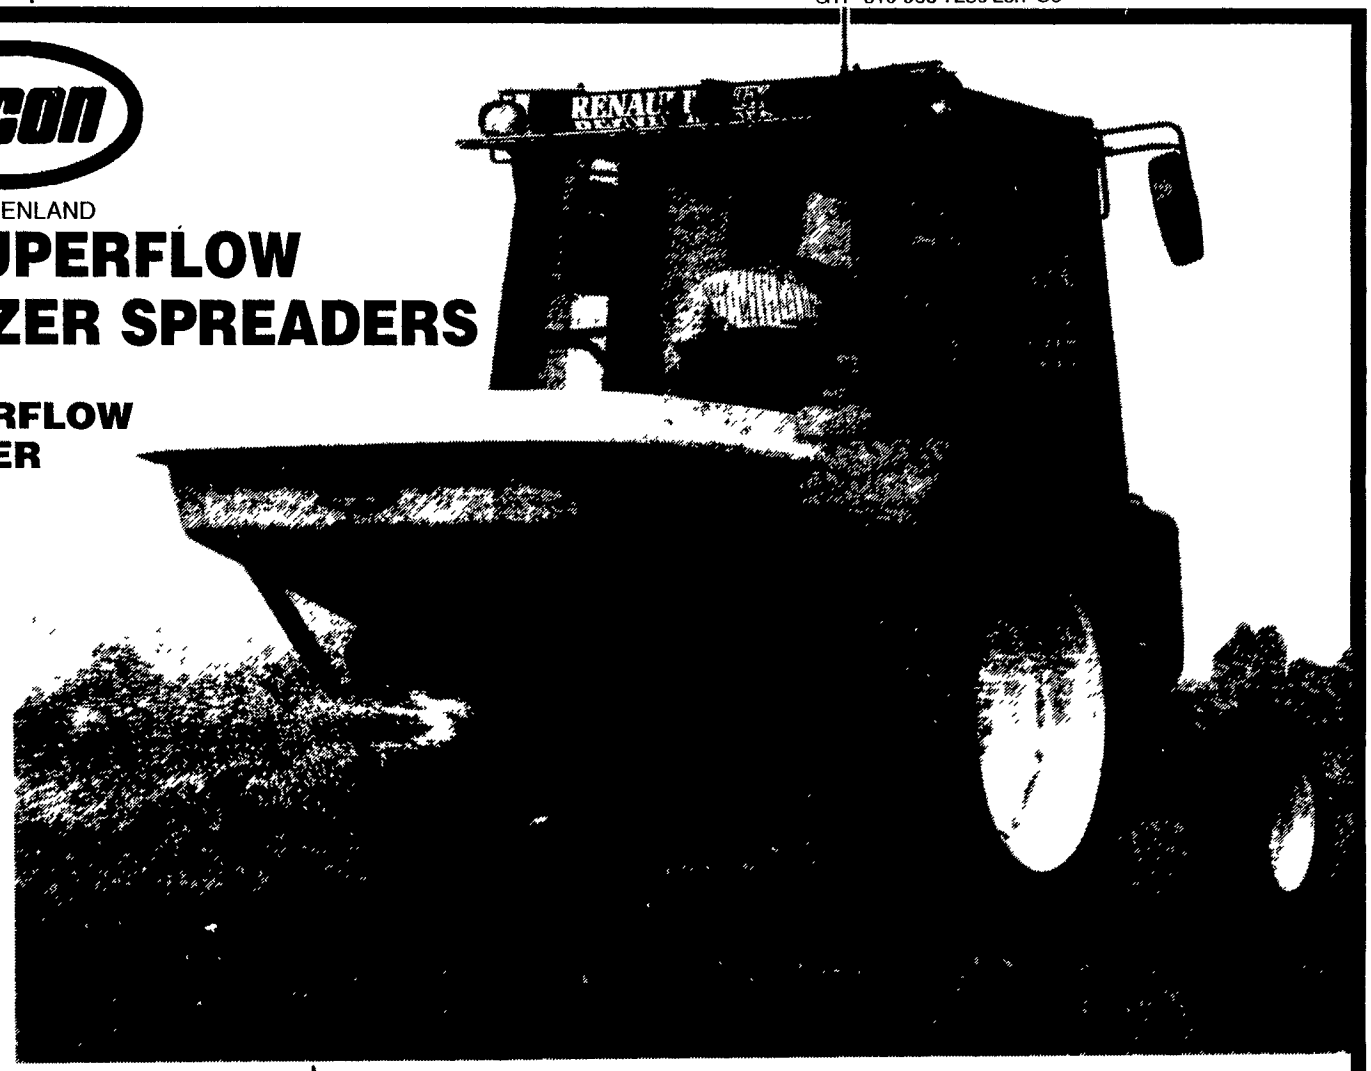
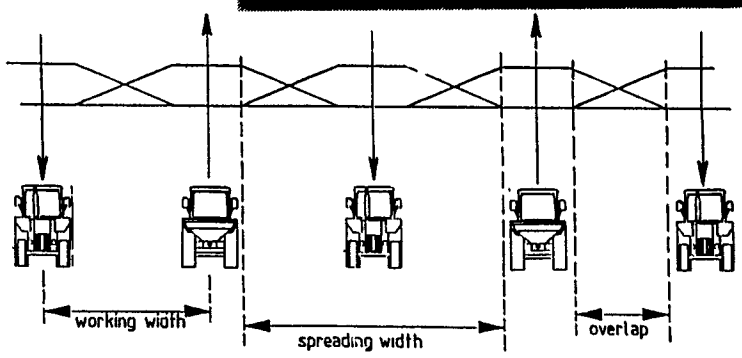
SUPERFLOW FERTILIZER SPREADERS



Vicon SUPERFLOW SEEDER

Spreaders are the most accurate broadcast spreaders in the world. The unique pendulum action keeps the spread pattern close to the rear of the machine while at the same time providing a symmetrical pattern on both sides.



The pattern allows "back and forth" as well as "around and around" operation. The "truncated" pattern offsets inaccurate overlap problems, eliminating streaking.

Vicon

Seeder spreaders are easily calibrated for extremely accurate performance.

Rust free polyester hoppers, "DURA-COAT" enamel on painted components with stainless steel metering plates, precision adjustments, and a variety of spouts for a multitude of applications have earned Vicon Superflow seeder spreaders a world-wide reputation as the premier broadcast spreader.

MAKE A SICK HOUSE WELL with the LIVING AIR XL-15

According to the EPA, indoor air pollution is our nation's biggest pollution problem. Modern homes and buildings are so energy efficient they block out nature's air cleaning agents and trap pollution inside–inside where you probably spend 90% of your time. What can you do? Ventilation systems can be expensive, and filters provide only a partial remedy. Why not look at nature? Living Air looked to nature before designing the revolutionary XL-15, an electronic thunderstorm in a box. A thunderstorm is nature's most powerful air cleaning activity. Why not take the test? Ask for a free, no obligation demonstration of the powerful Living Air XL-15.

Flexibility is the key to staying productive. And that's exactly what you'll get with the AGCO® Allis 5650 utility tractor.

In fact, this mid-range tractor has 45 PTO hp engine that offers you the ultimate in maneuverability. Its low height and low center of gravity make this the ideal tractor for working inside buildings and other confined work areas. And because the platform is low to the ground, it's easy to get on and off the tractor.

The synchromesh transmission has 12 forward and 12 reverse speed choices, with synchronized shifting in four gears and a synchronized forward/reverse shuttle.

As always, behind every AGCO Allis tractor lies a 4-year/4,000-hour warranty that's backed by your dealer.

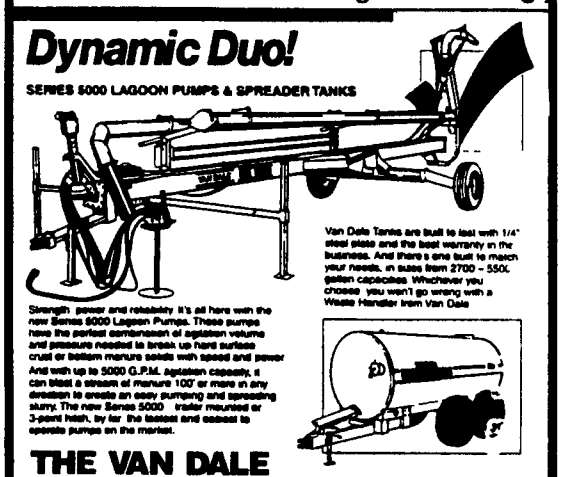
Dynamic Duo!

SERIES 5000 LAGOON PUMPS & SPREADER TANKS



Van Dale Tanks are built to last with 1/4" steel plate and the best warranty in the business. And there's one built to match your needs, in sizes from 2700 - 5500 gallon capacities. Whichever you choose, you won't go wrong with a Waste Handler from Van Dale.

The new Series 5000 trailer mounted or 3-point hitch, by far the fastest and easiest to operate pumps on the market.

Quality and speed of mixing:

- The mix quality produced by the 2 auger system will impress you by incorporating entire bales of fodder and by its quick mixing.
- Two convergent augers fitted with sections move the product towards the centre of the box body.
- At the same time, the action of the central counter knives and curved blades accelerates the chopping of fibrous products.

The benchmark for high-fibre feed rations

CLAAS® Country
Meeting all your harvesting needs!

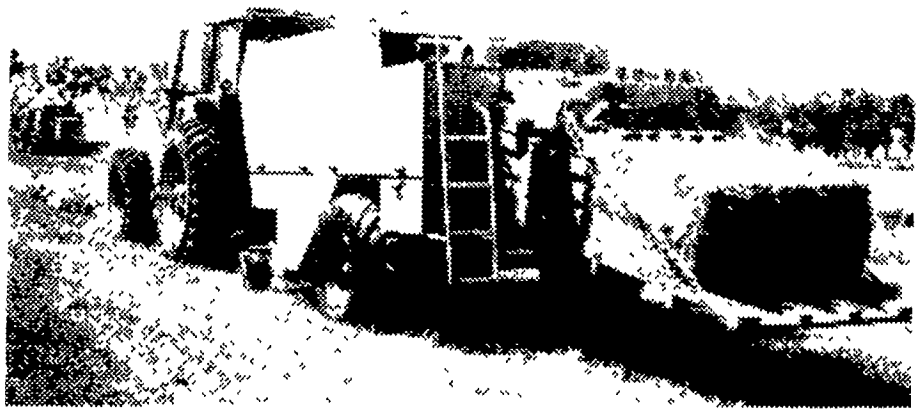
The CLAAS® Quadrant 1200 square baler—The new standard equipment for commercial operators



CLAAS doesn't have to sell a commercial operator on the advantages he gets from large, densely packed square bales

Yes, the Quadrant 1200 delivers the density commercial operators want Yes its bales inhibit spoilage by keeping the air out Yes, they preserve quality because they minimize nutrient loss

The 1200 also offers the high production capacities you demand Its 4 ft x 2-1/4 ft x up to 8 ft long bales effectively increase storage space and dramatically increase transport capacities—all at a high productivity rate And you know what this means to your bottom line

The Quadrant makes easy work of dry hay, haylage and silage crops—whatever you've got And it bales as much of it as you've got

CLAAS's shaft-driven knotters have earned a worldwide reputation for reliability and low maintenance Other notable features are its 3-stage pre chamber 78 wide pickup, powerful transmission heavy-duty worm gear 1000rpm pto, hydraulic density control capacity for up to 24 balls of sisal or plastic twine, and of course 6 dependable CLAAS shaft-driven knotters

Production capacity Convenient handling and storage Economical transport Density and quality A better bottom line

For more information about the Quadrant and how it can meet your commercial needs, contact the CLAAS dealer listed below

Incidently, CLAAS quality is also available in a smaller Quadrant model designed for dairy operators

New Holland side-delivery spreaders provide the most material control. Whether you're light top dressing, laying down a heavy layer, or anything in between, the Model 3110 puts the right amount of material right where you need it.

- Handles a wide variety of material – slurry, gutter material, cow manure, even poultry litter.
- V-tank design delivers material to the auger fast.
- Heavy-duty round-core auger produces less drag.
- Double-acting hydraulic cylinder moves auger up and down to keep material flowing.
- Hydraulic gate and specially designed expeller give precise application control.
- Backed by a 10-year warranty against tank rust-through.

See us for all your spreader needs.

CASE IH* 955 Cyclo Planters

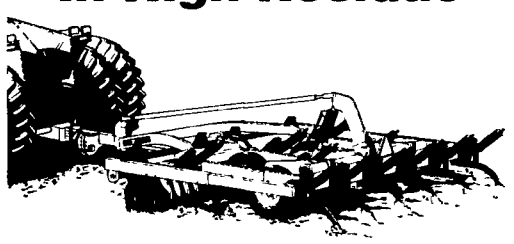
A seed needs six things from a planter to grow and thrive...six factors which produce a precision-controlled environment.

And only a Case International 950 Early Riser Planter, with its exclusive Cyclo® Air System, pays close attention to all six:

(1) Planted to the moisture level;
(2) Uniform depth;
(3) Evenly spaced;
(4) Good seed-to-soil contact;
(5) Uniform soil pressure; and
(6) Accurate population.

You'll get this performance whether you're planting in no-till, mulch-till or clean-till situations.

High Performance In High Residue



Case IH 6650 Conser-Till® Plow

A premium performer built tough for fast, smooth operation in heavy residue.

- Six-by-four inch heavy-duty mainframe strong enough to handle high operating speeds of high horsepower tractors increases your productivity
- Massive rock shaft provides the muscle to take on an extra heavy workload.
- High-efficiency, four-rank frame to ensure free-flowing crop residue.
- Standard hydraulic disk coulters for on-the-go adjustment to varying field conditions
- Standard auto reset shanks for more confident operation in unfavorable soil conditions.
- Four sizes available from seven to thirteen shanks.

Fruit Grower President Identifies Challenges To Industry

JINNY WILT
Adams County Correspondent

GARDENERS (Adams Co.) – The president of the Horticultural Association of Pennsylvania sees challenges ahead for state fruit growers, many of them similar to those found in other areas of agriculture.

James Lott, who has served on the state horticultural board of directors for 10 years and is in his second term as president of the 700-member association, points to the dumping of apple concentrate on the U.S. market, particularly by China, low prices, labor woes, and plans to revamp the pesticide regulations by the federal government as having a significant impact on growers.

Lott explained that the association, which is made up of fruit growers and Penn State research and education personnel, and those in the commercial end of the business such as packing houses and equipment suppliers, is joining in the battle to help its members.

The association has a history of helping members since its inception in 1859 in Lancaster County, Lott said.

Speaking of today's problems, Lott said, "This year an immediate concern for a lot of apple growers is the poor price. There's a lot of domestic production this year, and typically, a lot of production in this country is exported, but the Asian markets are not open this year because of economics in those countries.

"A lot of the Washington state crop goes overseas and of course, it's going over this year. So they have to sell their crop in this country, which hurts our (Pennsylvania) apple price."

Further impact on the apple growers comes form China "dumping" its apple concentrate in the U.S. market.

"They're selling it here less than it costs them to produce it, and that has hurt the juice price, which is really the underlying price for everything in our apple business," Lott said.

Concentrate dumping and price cuts has led to a 39 percent reduction in market prices received by the nation's apple growers, falling from an average of $153 per ton of juice apples in 1995 to just $93 per ton is 1997.

An "anti-dumping" suit is expected to be filed soon with the U.S. Department of Commerce on behalf of the

The 1998 apple crop, particularly in Adams, York, and Franklin counties, was "light," Lott said. Lott is president of the State Horticultural Association of Pennsylvania. "A short crop and low prices aren't going to help anybody," he said. Adams County is the state's largest producer of fruits.

In Booming Economy, Scarcity Of Labor Plagues Growers

ANDY ANDREWS

HERSHEY (Dauphin Co.) — It's a trend that scares one grower to death and left many in the industry angry, frustrated, and feeling helpless.

It's simple: orchardists are having an impossible time finding consistent, dependable, reliable workers — in a lot of cases, workers of any kind.

Some blame it on a booming economy. Others blame it on a lack of work ethic in school, at home, everywhere.

At one time, grower John Rigolizzo Jr., president of the New Jersey Farm Bureau, put an ad for help with their harvest in the local newspaper.

He didn't have a single response.

It was the same with people that used to travel up and down the road, looking for work.

"We did not see anybody," said Rigolizzo.

This development that plagues many orchardists and vegetable growers — a sudden

HERSHEY (Dauphin Co.) — Think about the profitability, according to one University of Minnesota extension specialist, of placing five turns of petunias through the greenhouse.

It can be done, and learning how to "fast crop" can have a "significant impact on profitability," said Dr. John Erwin, of the University of Minnesota, to a packed conference room of growers and agri-industry representatives in January at the nation's apple growers and processors, he said. "It's progressing pretty well and we think it's going to work, but we'll see," Lott explained.

The 1998 apple crop, particularly in Adams, York, and Franklin counties, was "light," Lott said "A short crop and low prices aren't going to help anybody." Adams County is the state's biggest producer of fruits.

Lott's orchards produce apples on 500 acres, peaches and nectarines on 300 acres, pears on 45 acres, and tart cherries on 35 acres. Some of the fruit is hauled to Knouse Foods, a fruitgrowers' cooperative, for processing, he said. Others find its way to grocery stores with New York City and Boston as large markets.

In addition to orchards, Lott's family is also part owner of Rice Fruit Company, a packing house in Gardeners. Lott is a fourth generation fruit grower on his mother's side and a third generation fruit grower on his father's side. He went to college at Michigan State to study pomolgy, the study of fruits.

After graduation, he decided to join the family business. Of his decision, he said, "it's a lot of long hours and rough weather, but I enjoy working outside."

He and his wife of 12 years, Barb, have three children, Sarah, 8, Greg, 6, and Dylan, 15 months.

While by mid-February his trees looked to be in good shape and the 1999 season was shaping up well, a few days of 70-degree weather had Lott keeping one eye on the thermometer because of fear that the trees would bud too soon and then freeze when cold weather hit again.

"The weather is very critical in this business, like any farmer We're very susceptible to winter freezes and spring frosts," he said.

The peach and nectarine crop is "volatile" and can be good or poor "depending on production in Georgia and Jersey and South Carolina," he said. "If they have a large crop the price goes down a little bit, but it's not too bad every year. One thing about it, by the time September and October are here it's over, it's all sold. It's not like apples that are here year-round.

"Tart cherries are that way. They're here year-round. They'll freeze them and keep them or can them and keep them. The cherry prices have been terrible the last couple of years. There's so much production and so little consumption. The hold-over from year to year is so great that they don't need more cherries," he said.

"There's another problem in the agriculture industry and it's not just fruit. It's the Food Quality Protection Act," he said.

"They (U.S. Environmental Protection Agency) want to take away chemicals...there's a list of chemicals we use that they're just going to take away from us with no suitable replacement. That can wreak havoc on the industry -- agriculture in general. All that I can hope is that they use sound science to make these decisions," he said.

Members of the state "hort" board were in Arizona recently attempting to learn more about the proposal "and trying to get them to be reasonable about it," Lott said.

He explained that while the chemicals used to keep pests and diseases from destroying a crop are already regulated by EPA, most fruit growers use less then approved because of the expense.

"We usually try to use a lot less than label grades because the stuff's expensive. We try to get away with as little as possible. Most people don't understand that, they think more is better...it's probably my second biggest expense after labor," he said.

In an effort to reduce farm chemicals, Lott said, "We use sprayers that have sonar sensors on them and they'll detect when there's a tree and when there isn't and it will shut it off if there's no tree, or if it's shorter or taller than the rest. This reduces our usage by about 25 percent and you don't have to worry about the guys who are running the sprayers turning it off at every tree, because that usually doesn't happen. They aren't as concerned about it as I am."

He also noted that the compounds used to spray trees are very expensive because today they are specific and aimed at one particular pest rather than at all insects.

"It's harmless to our predator populations. We try to keep predators such as beetles and lady bugs here for mites. We go out in our orchards every week looking for this stuff, trying to determine when we need to spray. If the population threshold is high enough, then we'll do something about it. If not, we'll just wait and see if the predators will take care of it and try to reduce our sprays that way. We don't want to spray," he said.

Called integrated pest management, or IPM, Lott said, the method has been practiced in Adams County since the early 1970s. "We've been practicing it here on the farm as long as I can remember, but it's gotten to be a big thing lately and being pushed as a new thing, but it's not new here. We've been doing it a long time here. I'm glad people are actually trying to publish it now...it's good for the industry and the consumer."

Labor is also a problem for fruit growers.

While Lott said his farm uses a regular crew that comes to Adams County from Florida to harvest the fruit, some area fruit growers are not so fortunate.

Some of his neighbors rely on a traffic flow of people asking for work. "Typically we had people stopping here a couple times a week looking for work in the harvest season, but this year I think I had one car stop all season. A lot of it, I think, has to do with the Immigration and Naturalization Service and their raids.

"The way they're doing it, it's not necessary that the people are illegal. They're just taking everybody out of the operation, then check their cards and send them home even if they're legal. I've heard some real horror stories from fruit growers, not in this county or this area, but some have had their whole labor force taken away from their packing house. It was awful the way they did it, and there wasn't anybody there illegal," Lott said.

"We obviously have to document all of our workers and make sure they have permits or are legal to work. I don't necessarily agree with that... the federal government should be border control, not us. They put that responsibility on us," he said.

And the federal government has failed to provide a suitable Guest Worker Program. The current program is too complicated to get workers into the states, Lott said. "We want something that's easier and faster, " he said.

He explained that it's possible to get domestic help to work in the orchards, so it's important to fruit growers to get help that wants to work from Mexico and other countries. "I have a hard time getting people to run the equipment, let alone pick the fruit. It is hard work and it's seasonal."

He said the national Council of Ag Employers is working to improve the regulations so that it will be easier to find workers. Legislation for the program failed to pass in Congress last year and it is expected to be brought up again this year.

In Booming Economy, Scarcity Of Labor Plagues Growers

lack of farm workers — "scares me to death," said Rigolizzo.

Rigolizzo and other growers spoke during a special labor session in January during the Mid-Atlantic Fruit and Vegetable Conference in Hershey.

This year, senior citizens sometimes can't do the work, according to the New Jersey grower. High school students are too busy with sports or other activities. And because of new federal regulations, migrant workers are scarce.

Where Rigolizzo used to have 25-30 people in season to do the work on the 500-acre farm, "we thought we would accept 15. We started with 11. In some weeks, we had seven.

"We did it, we survived, but it hit home," he said.

Richard Pallman, a grower from Pennsylvania, realized that they had to rely totally on migrant labor.

"It's almost impossible to get local people to do this kind of work anymore," he said.

In the past, Pallman said he relied on local people to pick produce at his farm, including "school kids, retired people, and housewives — those are the type of people we relied on. It's been two years since we've had individuals of high school age come to our farm looking for a job."

John Rigolizzo Jr. and other growers spoke during a special labor session in January during the Mid-Atlantic Fruit and Vegetable Conference in Hershey.

Regulations have been so strict that the owners and operators of orchards have had to deal with stringent fines. A minor violation can cost as much as $3,000. "It's impossible to be in compliance 100 percent of the time," said Pallman.

All workers at the farm have to have proper documentation before they can work. They have to be registered with the Naturalization and Immigration Service. Even though some may be illegal aliens, the growers accept their identification at face value — what else are they going to do?

"Fruit and vegetable growers could see serious labor shortages in the years to come," Pallman said, "if not this year."

Growers unable to get workers will see the produce "rotting in the fields." He said, "Labor will always be a necessary evil of the industry."

For Rigolizzo, Congress has a "strong sentiment against people coming into our country." The fact that the U.S. was settled by people from all over Europe and other countries is what has kept the industry thriving. And now, as the government turns its back on immigrants, the work force is drying up — what Rigolizzo finds "unsettling."

Brad Hollabaugh, an Adams County grower who maintains 500 acres, said a great deal of a grower's time is eroded by regulations. Many growers don't seem to have much if any control over regulations, which hamper their industry.

For his farm, Hollabaugh relies on 40-50 migrant workers, Haitians and Hispanics, to do work. One Haitian family recently celebrated its 20th year at the farm.

But like Pallman and Rigolizzo, the local labor force has dried up. In the 1970s, "crews" of high school students, said Hollabaugh, would come looking for work. "That doesn't happen anymore." He said, "I've had only one successful student employee."

As for the rest, he said, "the ones that come really don't want to work."

In 1998, the farm had to suffer through the smallest work crew in its history. Even though there are some illegal aliens out there, which is unfortunate, "these are the people who do our work.

"It is the curse of the farmer. We need people, and we have to house them. But we are just tortured with inspections."

Unfortunately, there is a lot of duplication of effort on the part of the government. "We need to change that somewhere very soon. I have a job to do, and I want to survive. A good supply of workers is critical for that goal."

Also at the joint session on labor, Bob Trax Jr., of Trax Farms Inc., Finleyville, provided an overview of his farm. Trax Farms employs 244, including 85 full-time, 21 seasonal, and 53 high school students.

In the past 20 years, Trax Farms has employed almost all local people, from high school to college. Now, he said, kids have a lot of obligations with school sports, or both parents work — and migrant workers are used.

Despite a hike in minimum wage, 1998 was the first year that labor costs actually went down, he said. They eliminated about 10 crops (making up only 1 percent of gross sales, including eggplant and others). More and more, production is under plastic, with drip irrigation. Machines have replaced much of the hand labor once used on the farm.

Crew size has been reduced as the farm is advocating pick your own.

Despite this, Brad Hollabaugh, a Pennsylvania grower, believes that growers must communicate with the government.

"Write a lot," he said. "We do have some power in government. Trouble is, we don't get involved in the government when we should."

For Pepper Production, Use Raised, Crowned Beds

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

HERSHEY (Dauphin Co.) — Growers who want to get a good, healthy start with their peppers under plastic cover should remember this: use raised, crowned beds.

Dr. Steve Garrison, specialist in vegetable crops with Rutgers Ag Research and Extension Center, told growers at the recent Mid-Atlantic Fruit and Vegetable Convention in Hershey that they should build good, firm, crowned beds to allow water to slope away from the plant. Keeping the water away from the center of the bed prevents diseases and excess water buildup out of the plant.

Garrison spoke about the surge of popularity in peppers because of the growing ethnic market. Salsa has a greater selling volume than ketchup these days, he said.

New varieties of peppers are being developed to fight common plant diseases such as phytophthora blight, which can pose a serious threat to pepper plant health. New varieties are resistant to the blight.

Since 1997, there has been growing nationwide interest in the large and extra-large sized fruits for stuffing. Many new varieties not only are larger, but have thicker walls and a higher percentage of them can withstand droughty conditions.

For Pepper Production

For hot pepper varieties, there is an "explosion," with new varieties coming on all the time.

To prevent disease pressure, in addition to using the raised, crowned beds, seeds should be treated with Clorox (one part to four parts water) and rinsed, to rid them of disease- causing organisms, before planting. The key, Garrison said, is to wash off the seed completely, leaving no residue.

When planting, crop rotation is essential, Garrison noted.

Select fields that have had no peppers, tomatoes, eggplant, or cucurbit crops for at least three years. Fields with previous, similar crops can be host to a wide range of organisms.

Choose an area with excellent drainage. Subsoil to break the hardpan. Create rows to allow them to drain easily and quickly.

For peppers, apply a preplant fertilizer of 40 pounds of nitrogen per acre.

Beds should be raised to about six inches off the ground, firm and dome-shaped. Plots should be laid with plastic at 34-36 inches wide. Single-row peppers can produce larger fruit and a higher percentage of large fruit.

When planting, make sure the crown slopes away from the stem of the plant. Place soil around plant to fill planting depression. Do not allow the soil to become saturated for a long period of time.

With the drip line, use soil probes and tensiometers to manage drip. Rutgers recommends four tensiometers per management zone, placed 6-12 inches deep and close to the drip line.

Measurements of soil moisture should be conducted regularly to avoid excessive water applications.

Apply a soluble fertilizer through the drip within one week after transplanting. Apply micronutrients according to soil test recommendations.

Application of nitrogen fertilizer will vary with soil type.

Five to six application of fertilizer spaced three weeks apart will provide good fertilization distribution when needed, according to Garrison. The total amount of fertilizer will be higher on loamy soils.

Keep the plants upright through the growing season. Reduce sunburn by using a single-row weave-type system similar to tomato production. Disease control can be similar to greenhouse drips, including antibiotic applications when necessary.

A good disease management system includes a combination of blight and anthracnose control, in addition to maintaining proper soil moisture and nutrients.

Garrison also explained a variety of ways to control aphids and other insects, including using a drenching technique before taking the transplants out of the greenhouse.

At harvest, green harvest them, said Garrison, at full size.

"Harvest when dry to avoid spread of disease," he said. Handle plants carefully to avoid breakage. Don't break off the top, fruit-producing branches of the plant. Get the fruits out of the sun quickly.

Dry pack the fruit and cool the room to 45-50 degrees Fahrenheit to extend shelf life. Growers can also wash the fruits in water with at least 25 parts per million of chlorine, dry the peppers, and cool them to prevent disease from starting on the fruit.

These methods of pepper production, adopted by growers in New Jersey, can easily "apply here as well," said Garrison.

New York Hort Show A Snowy Success

ROCHESTER N.Y. – New York fruit growers are accustomed to dealing with sun, rain, and wind, but the weather for the 1999 annual meeting of the New York State Horticultural Society (NYSHS) was a little daunting unless you were from Buffalo.

Growers from Niagara and Erie counties were only too happy to escape the six-foot snow drifts in their apple orchards to tackle the sleet and snow that central New York had to offer.

"Weather was a major factor," said NYSHS Executive Director Dan Donahue. "Of the 340 people preregistered, we were down 30 percent in attendance on Wednesday and Thursday, and the walk-in traffic was not what it usually is. On Friday we were lucky to have a roof, because it was leaking severely in the restaurant. But, on the positive side, the rooms were full for the all-day grape varieties and clones seminars and the three-day Lake Ontario Tree Fruit School (LOFT)."

Donahue was also enthusiastic about the turnout for the produce industry seminar. Discussion revolved around new developments in NAFTA, the ag export and Brazilian currency crises, and marketing and promotion programs that work for California growers.

Another positive development was the formation of a new fruit industry association called the Northeast Stone Fruit Sponsors (NESFS). The association will represent all tender fruits, including sweet cherries, tart cherries, peaches, prunes, plums, and apricots and provide the mechanism for producers in the Maryland-Maine-Ohio growing triangle to be able to get the information growers need to profitably produce and market tender (stone) fruit in the Northeast.

About 75 grape growers and winemakers attended the sessions on vinifera grape varieties and clones organized by viticulturist Robert Pool and enologist Thomas Henick-Kling from the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station (NYSAES), in

Hort Show

Geneva, NY. Poll and Henick-Kling highlighted 20 years of Cornell University research exploring the use of modern European clones of the major Vitis vinifera classic premium grape varieties in the Northeast. They also offered a tasting of 11 wines from NYSAES vinfera trials.

Mike Cunningham reported on how the Foundation Plant Materials Service program functions in importing, quarantining, testing, cleaning, and certifying new grape varieties.

A new regional cooperative effort between Cornell, the region's premium wineries, and the major nurseries was also unveiled. Pool and Henick-Kling will coordinate commercial evaluation of improved selections of vinifera throughout the region by providing growers with plant material to field test. Every winery in the Northeast is invited to participate. This initiative was made possible by a grant from the Viticulture Consortium, a federal grant program.

"The importance of Geneva as a regional and state resource for the New York grape and wine industry is widely recognized," said Pool. For further information, check out the Cornell Grape World Wide Web pages at; http://www.nysaes.cornell.edu/hort/.

For the third year in a row, the Western New York Fruit Schools served as the backbone of the educational program for the NYS Hort Show. This year the fruit school featured Alan Jones and Randy Beaudry from Michigan State University, and Gerry Walker and Len Troup representing OMFRA and the Tender Fruit Industry of Ontario, Canada. The two and one-half day program included comprehensive information on new apple varieties, stone fruit culture, insect and disease management and control, tree vigor management, as well as business and labor management. The concurrent Employee Program offered the opportunity for Pesticide Certification Training. Cornell Cooperative Extension continues to provide the fruit growers of New York with the latest in research-based information.

SPECIALIZING IN PRE-ENGINEERED STEEL BUILDINGS SINCE 1990

Founded in 1990 and incorporated in 1992, A S HOOVER, INC has grown rapidly for good reasons The corporation has been recognized in two recent issues of a national industry news magazine

WHY A.S. HOOVER, INC. FOR STEEL BUILDINGS?

A. SAFETY! With emphasis on strength, NO BUILDING FROM A.S. HOOVER HAS EVER COLLAPSED!

B. QUALITY AND DESIGN. In addition to commercial, agricultural, and industrial applications including cranes, buildings from HOOVER have met the strict criteria of the National, State, and Township Governments, the School District, and the Philadelphia Airport

C. PRICE! With the most of buildings coming from the lower cost South, and hauled on backhaul, plus a high volume combined with low handling overhead, HOOVER is a leader in cost per ton of steel on the jobsite

D. RELIABILITY! CECO Building Systems, originally Mitchell Buildings is one of the oldest and largest metal building firms The record of Pennsylvania German builders speaks for itself

In short, A.S. Hoover, Inc. brings to the customer via the smaller Plain people contractors, the benefits of a larger organization while maintaining the frugality for which they are noted. With concentration on efficiency and workmanship, alcohol, profanity, and blaring radios are not permitted on the job

In addition to the volume with CECO, Dealerships are also held with KIRBY (spans to 40' on 12" purlins) and CORLE (galvanized girt and purlin systems) giving unsurpassed coverage of all applications

Orchard Mechanization Could Make Bottom Line Blossom

ANDY ANDREWS
Lancaster Farming Staff

HERSHEY (Dauphin Co.) — Mechanization can have a beneficial, even profound, effect on the orchard industry, according to several business owners and operators who spoke here in January during the Mid-Atlantic Fruit and Vegetable Convention at the Hershey Lodge and Convention Center.

For Charles Haines of Elmer, N.J., it was a rope peach thinner that drastically cut costs. For Doug Zee of Glassboro, N.J., it was weed control with groundcover management. Rolf DeCou of DeCou Orchards in Shiloh, N.J., claims a dual tank sprayer cut down on the number of passes through rows, covering two sides at once. Richard Keim of Boyertown realized how much time and labor were saved using bin haulers. And For Lee Spencer of Shanesville, a combination rotary mower and sprayer saved labor by combining two important orchard management chores into one.

All agreed that an investment in mechanization saved time, costs, and related management headaches of caring for their crops.

Charles Haines realized a few years ago that his orchard was "spending far too much money thinning peaches," he said. "Our profit was spent hand thinning."

So he looked at a rope thinner developed by the Fruit Research Center at the USDA Kearneysville, W. Va., facility. And he liked what he saw — soon incorporating a system using #10 jute heavy rope, 11 foot in diameter that can reach eight feet into the tree, to thin the trees.

Haines said, "We've saved 75-85 percent of thinning costs," noting the results: "a profound effect on the business." As a result of thinning, there are larger sized fruits on the tree.

Some years can bring a late frost, which can result in overthinning. One year, combined with an early frost, harvest was reduced by 35 percent.

"It's not a perfect situation," he said. "But we feel it's something we're going to keep."

Thinning for peaches takes place at pink bud and two to three weeks after bloom. They complete two passes at 5-7 acres per day. The thinning system, he noted, works fine on New Jersey's level ground, but could pose a challenge with deeply sloped areas.

A real challenge at spraytime is how to handle rows in an efficient manner. Rolf DeCou, Shiloh, N.J., wanted a machine to handle both sides of the row. So he came up with a machine that makes use of two 250-gallon plastic tanks and which could spray in tandem.

"There's a lot of plumbing involved in this thing," he said, describing what is involved in loading and operating the sprayer.

Two pumps are used, one for the hydraulic system of the tractor and another that is PTO-driven. They are able to care for 350 acres of apples and peaches and can reach all orchards in about a week in decent weather, two weeks if there are wind challenges.

The tanks are drawn by a small tractor. They can cover about 18-20 acres at 3.5 miles an hour. It takes about 3-4 hours to empty the tanks.

DeCou's advice to those who want to use a tandem spray system: "keep a real close watch on the weather," he said. "Know the weather before spraying."

A big labor-saving device on the Richard Keim farm, Boyertown, includes bin haulers.

Keim showed slides of several types of bin haulers in use at the farm. One, which is self-propelled with a two-cylinder diesel engine, can collect a number of bins and transport fruit out of the orchard. The bins can readily be unloaded at the collection point.

One day, Lee Spencer, from Shanesville, took a look at what European orchards were doing and decided to adopt some of their strategies for mowing and spraying.

He decided, why not do what they are doing — combine the mowing and spraying into one pass? So he put together a unit, driven by 60 horsepower tractor, to run a combination rotary mower (Perfect mower, with two larger blades and a small blade in the center) and tower sprayer combination. The mower, operated from a three-point hitch, has a cutting width of 89 inches. The PTO unit runs the sprayer.

"While driving through the orchards while spraying, why not mow the grass?" said Spencer.

European orchards have used this technology for years. On a tour there recently, he praised their way of doing things. "They are so practical," he said. "You never see an orchard where you see tall grass growing — everybody has a mower-sprayer."

The rows are on 10-foot centers. The mower is narrow enough profile and the unit is constructed in such a way as to prevent limb damage. The system can handle up to 12-foot rows.

The mower is a belt-driven, finish device, so it is important to remove rocks. The mower can't grind brush.

Growers in Switzerland are so proud of their system that "they plant roses at the end of rows of apple trees," Spencer said. "Their orchards are immaculate."

Keeping weed pressure down has become a science for Doug Zee, Glassboro, N.J. The rows have a cover made up of hard fescues with 10 percent ryegrass.

The covers, established in 1996, are mowed four times, beginning in May, during the season. Herbicide — 2,4-D — is used to control broadleaves. In all, a great deal of the 142 acres are cared for with the system.

Soil Amendments Can Help Fruit Trees

WOOSTER, Ohio – Tree fruit producers can benefit from soil amendments and mulches – as long as they know what, where, and when to use them.

Organic matter can help trees grow more vigorously, but it also has the potential to harm trees.

Ohio State University's Harry Hoitink, plant pathology professor at the Wooster campus of the Ohio Agricultural Research and Development Center, said many factors contribute to the success or failure of soil organic management practices. Growers should know the difference between fresh and composted organic mater, when to apply the product, the optimum depth of mulch layers, and the effects the mulch will have on the trees.

Hoitink discussed soil amendments for tree fruit production at the 1999 Fruit and Vegetable Growers Congress, Feb. 3-5 at the Toledo Seagate Centre. The congress was held in conjunction with the Roadside Marketing Conference and the Ohio Grape-Wine Short Course. More than 1,600 growers and industry-affiliated personnel attended the joint conferences and trade show

It's important to know if fresh or composted organic matter is right for the situation. "Most fresh plant materials can negatively affect plant growth and plant health," Hoitink said. "For example, freshly ground wood used as a landscape mulch increases water retention in soils, immobilizing nitrogen. This can lead to poor growth, and it increases the danger of Phytophthora root rot infection – a disease that will kill the plant."

Composted yard waste prepared from ground wood and grass clippings has the opposite effect. This type of amendment improves plant growth, drainage and water retention. It also provides biological control against Phytophthora. The same results can be obtained with tree bark amendments.

It's important to know the type of amendment to use. For example, fresh straw mulches, popular for some fruit and vegetable plants, can increase the chance of Phytophthora and other diseases in apple trees and red raspberry bushes. Composts suppress these problems.

Vetch is a useful amendment – if you know how to use it. Hoitink said if trees are planted shortly after vetch is plowed into soil, it increases the chance for disease. If growers wait 10 days after plowing to plant, the green manure will be fully colonized by soil microorganisms, suppressing disease and promoting biocontrol.

Perhaps patience is a virtue when using organic matter Hoitink said fresh amendments or mulches have temporary negative effects Problems arise because plant tissues are still fresh within the matter When incorporated into the soil, the tissues decay, releasing sugars, proteins and other water-soluble nutrients This stimulates plant pathogens and soil microorganisms Fresh organic matter also binds water, increasing the water content of the soil

"As soon as organic matter is partially decomposed and competition for food begins among soil microorganisms, beneficial effects begin," Hoitink said "Pathogens are suppressed or killed, and beneficial microorganisms thrive This improves the soil structure, resulting in improved water retention and drainage "

Soil amendments also affect soil fertility, Growers must balance the soil and amendments to aid plant growth

"As organic matter decomposes, it forms fulvic acids These are end products resistant to decomposition that form humic acids which are soluble in water These acids remain dissolved in water and soil during the decomposition process They absorb trace elements like iron, zinc, manganese and copper, improving availability of these elements in the soil When the soil is highly mineralized,the humic acids are no longer soluble, and the beneficial effects disappear.

Hoitink said that's one reason why manures and sludges "green up grass" so readily "Highly stabilized sources of organic matter like muck soils or peat don't provide these beneficial effects Pathogens typically cause heavy losses in these soils, unless pesticides are used for control "

Composts prepared from manures and sewage sludges release significant quantities of nutrients important for plant growth They also may be high in salt content – causing problems for the tree

"These need to be applied based on the fertility requirement of the crop ' Hoitink said Since the nutrients are released over several years, large amounts can be applied relative to the same amount of nutrients in the fertilizers "

About a half bushel of manure or sludge composts per tree will yield positive effects on some tree crops Manures and sludges can also stimulate germination of weed seeds, however, and these materials should be incorporated into the soil during tree planting They do not make an ideal mulch

Hardwood bark consists of large particles and it can immobilize nitrogen unless composted first Hoitink recommends adding nitrogen to the mixture before using it on trees It will then be very effective as a mulch, using one or more bushels per tree Composted yard wastes are also effective growth promoters – they enhance soil fertility and provide biological control of diseases

Fresh, undecomposed materials should be applied in the fall or winter when pathogens and crops are least active Composted sewage sludges and manures should not be applied in the spring or summer when Phytophthora and other diseases are most active This could increase disease pressure Hoitink recommends applying these products in the late fall or midwinter, to allow leaching of salts

Hoitink said most mulches need to be applied at a 2-inch depth to provide weed control 'Some landscapers apply mulches to a depth of four to 6 inches Studies have shown that woodchips applied at a 4-inch depth decreased the colonization of trees by mycorrhizae, a highly beneficial and growth-promoting fungus A 2-inch layer will enhance tree establishment and colonization by the mycorrhizae The correct amount of material will stimulate tree growth "

When using soil amendments, it's important to know how long the effects will last Hoitink said disease suppression of composted hardwood barks last about three years "The lignin (dark material) and waxes in the bark resist decomposition and this is the reason for the long-term effect," Hoitink said

Composted yard wastes like wood and grass clippings break down much more rapidly A 2-inch deep layer of the mulch could last a few years Composted manures and green manures also decompose rapidly Hoitink said the product's longevity basically depends upon the chemistry of the original material and factors in the soil

"The frequency of application varies from crop to crop and product to product," Hoitink said
